(1914)—S. 105 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 591)—Punjab Courts (XVIII of 1884 as amended), s. 70 (b)—Regulation XVII of 1806—Demand.—In a plaint in a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage there was no mention of a demand for payment having been made before the application for the issue of notice under Regulation XVII of 1806 on the mortgagor, but it was expressly stated in the application that several demands had been made. The suit was decreed and the decree was confirmed on appeal. The defendant filed an application under s. 70 (b) of the Punjab Courts Act in the Chief Court and objected for the first time that there was no proof of the demand of payment previous to the issue of the notice, and it was, therefore, bad in law. It was contended for the plaintiff that the objection was made too late, and that he should at all events be given an opportunity to produce evidence. The Chief Court allowed the objection to be urged and remanded the suit for the evidence of the parties to be taken on the question of demand of payment before the application, or the issue of the notice of foreclosure. It is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove affirmatively by satisfactory evidence that the proceedings for the issue of notice were strictly regular and in accordance with law (11 C. 111, P.C., 16 P.R. 1888, F.) The terms of s. 591 of the Civ. Pro. Code do not apply to revisions under s. 70 (b) of the Punjab Courts Act. MELLA v. RALLIA RAM, 162 P.L.R. 1903=71 P.R. 1903.

It is not necessary for a suit or to appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may feel himself aggrieved. and notice of his application for an interim injunction pending the hearing of the appeal has been directed to issue to the defendants, the High Court has jurisdiction to make an interim order pending the return of the notice. The fact of the appeal not being against a decree does not prevent the appellate Court from exercising jurisdiction in the matter. It would be anomalous to hold that the High Court in a second appeal against a decree possesses powers which it does not possess in an appeal from an original order; and the want of uniformity in the language of the two ss. 587, 590, Civ. Pro. Code, is not good reason for so holding. The power to make such order exists apart from any express provision of the Code, as part of the inherent jurisdiction of the appellate tribunal incidental to the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction. Per Davies, J., Diss. :—The term "procedure" in s. 590, Civ. Pro. Code, is not intended to cover all the provisions of Ch. XLI, Civ. Pro. Code, and s. 582 in that chapter, conferring on appellate Courts under that chapter the same powers as Courts of original jurisdiction, is pre-eminently not a point of "procedure" as the term is used in s. 590. On the 4th September, 1894, the respondents made an application to the Court, in which they alleged that, on the 25th November, 1893, the parties to the appeal had entered into a compromise, whereby the appellants agreed to withdraw the appeal, that notwithstanding the said agreement the appellant had not withdrawn the appeal, and they prayed that the Court would reject the appeal. Upon the application an order was made that notice should be given to the appellants and that the application should be brought up at the hearing of the appeal. On the date when the appeal was called on, the respondents objected to the hearing of the appeal and asked that it might be dismissed on the grounds stated in the application above referred to. Held, that where it is shown that an appeal has been adjusted by a lawful compromise, the Court can, under s. 375, read with s. 582, Code of Civil Procedure record the compromise and pass a decree in accordance therewith. Held, further, that where one of the parties objects to the compromise being recorded and a decree being given in its terms, the other party should move the Court to have the compromise recorded and to pass a decree in accordance with its terms, and the matter can be decided on affidavits, or, if necessary, by a special issue on oral evidence, Held, therefore, that the respondents should amend their application and ask the Court to act under s 375, Civ. The High Court held that the decree was not final within the meaning of s. 595 of the Civ. Pro. Code, of 1882, and that there was nothing so special in the case as to bring it under cl. (In the appeal to the Privy Council, from the above order refusing certificate, reported in 15 B. 155, the Judicial Committee held that the decree in the case was final on the ground that it established the liability of the defendants to account, irrespective of the fact that it was not the last decree in the matter). (a) of s. 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Two essential elements are to be considered in deciding whether an order is passed on appeal within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 109 of the Code, namely, (1) whether there exists the relation of superior and inferior Court; and (2) whether there exists the power, on the part of the superior tribunal, to review, affirm, modify or reverse the decision of the inferior tribunal. (13 C.L. J. 90, F.) An order of the High Court based on the ground that the allegations in an application to sue in forma pauperis do not disclose any cause of action, is a final order ' within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 109 of the Code. The term ' final order ' denotes an order which finally decides any matter directly at issue in the case in respect of the rights of the parties. If the order decides in effect finally the cardinal point in the suit, if it decides an issue which goes to the foundation of the suit and therefore is an order which could never, while the decision stands, be questioned again in the suit, it is a ' final order ' within the meaning of s. 109 of the Code, notwithstanding that there may be subordinate enquiries to be made. Whether the character of finality can be rightly claimed in respect of an order, should be determined with reference to the precise relation in which it stands to the proceeding before the Court. C was, under a decree of Court, entitled to receive allowance payable to him being charged on the taluka. Upon the death of C, A instituted a suit against (1) C's son, (2) M, and (3) the mortgagee in possession of M's share, alleging that the allowance of Rs. 70 per mensem enured only for the life of C and, after his death, was not chargeable against her one-fourth share, that defendants 2 and 3 were not entitled to debit in rendition of accounts her one-fourth share with a proportionate part of the allowance. The value of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction was estimated at Rs. 3,000, being the value of a one-fourth share of the allowance. C's son pleaded that the allowance was heritable. The other two defendants supported this plea. A's suit was ultimately dismissed by the Judicial Commissioner. The parties to the appeal were only A and C's son. A applied for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council. Held that, although A valued her suit as one in which the subject-matter was the right of C's son to receive from her, as owner of a fourth share in the taluka, annually the sum of Rs. 210, and this was the question directly in issue between the parties, yet, the determination of this question necessitated the determination of the question whether the allowance of Rs. 70 per mensem, charged on the taluka, was heritable, or was limited to the life of the original grantee, C, and, therefore, the decree of the Court involved indirectly a question between the parties, the annuitant and one of the co-sharers in the taluka, respecting property above Rs. 10,000 in value, that is to say, the question whether the allowance of Rs. 840 per annum was heritable or ceased on the death of C. Held, therefore, that a certificate should be granted, that, as regards value and nature, the case fulfilled the requirements of s. 596, Civ. Pro. Code, there is no right of appeal to the Privy Council simply on the ground that a substantial point of law is involved. The presence of such a question does not give a right of appeal when the value is below the mark: the requirement of it restricts the right when the higher Court affirms the lower, and the dispute either directly or indirectly relates to an amount of Rs. 10,000 [R. 23 A. 415 P.C. 24 A. 236=22 A.W.N. 46.] Under ss. 595 and 600, Civ. The word 'otherwise' refers to special cases, such as, where the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance. But in all such cases, a special certificate to that effect must be granted by the High Court. The mere assent of the respondent to an appeal does not give the appellant a right of appeal which the Code does not allow, or sustain a certificate which from some oversight or other is obviously erroneous. Pro. Code, or of its power of superintendence under s. 15 of the Charter Act, is "an order made or passed on appeal" within the meaning of s. 100 of the Civ. Pro. Code and s. 30 of the Letters Patent. The term "final order" in s. 109 of the Civ. Pro. Code and s. 39 of the Letters Patent, denotes an order which finally decides any matter directly at issue in the case in respect of the rights of the parties. If the order decides in effect finally the cardinal point in the suit, and, therefore, is an order which can never, while the decision stands, be questioned again in the suit, it is "final," notwithstanding that there may be subordinate inquiries to be made. In a land acquisition case, the High Court, on the application of the parties, ordered, under s. 115 of the Civ. Pro. Code, that the Judge had no jurisdiction to review, at the instance of the Secretary of State, the award of the Collector in so far as it was not challenged by the claimants, and also that he had no jurisdiction to make an order for discovery: Held, that the order of the High Court was not a "final order" within the meaning of s. 109 of the Civ. Pro Code, or s. 39 of the Letters Patent; for although it determines only a question of law which affects one part alone of the case, it leaves other matters still to be determined. An application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the order was, therefore, refused. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. BRITISH INDIAN STEAM NAVIGATION CO., 9 Ind. (a) of s. 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The term 'final order' in cl. (a) of s. 109 of the Code denotes an order which finally decided any matter directly at issue in the case in respect of the rights of the parties. (10 C.L.J. 336, F.) An order cannot be deemed to have been passed on appeal, unless it is an order passed by a superior Court, in reversal, modification or affirmance of an order of an inferior Court. To constitute appellate jurisdiction, there must exist the relation of superior and inferior Court and the power on the part of the former to review the decision of the latter. Cl. (c) of s. 109 of the Code is intended to meet special cases, such, for example as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance. The discretion vested in the Court by cl. (c) of s. 109 of the Code is to be sparingly used. The question, whether or not the applicant had established that substantial loss might result to him if execution was not stayed pending the hearing of the appeal presented to the High Court, is not a question of such exceptional importance as would justify a special certificate of fitness under cl. (c) of s. 109 of the Code. Cl. (c) of s 109 of the Code is not to be interpreted as restricted in its application to cases of 'final orders,' precisely in the same manner as cls. (a) and (b). (1981)—S. 110 (=s. 596, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—"Substantial question of law"—What is a question of fact—Leave to appeal refused.—The main question at issue in a suit for partition of moveable and immoveable property being whether the family was or was not joint in title and interest, the defendants, on being asked what they would call evidence to prove, set down a series of facts which they alleged that they could prove, and which, they contended, indicated that the family was, at the time of suit, joint as to property as well as in other respects. The plaintiff admitted the facts so alleged, and the parties therefore summoned no witnesses on either side. Some documentary evidence, however, was put in, mainly consisting of the will of the late head of the family. Held that the finding on these data as to what was the status of the family was a finding of fact merely and could involve no "substantial question of law" within the meaning of s. 596 of the Code. (1983)—S. 110 (=s. 596, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Appeal to Privy Council, certificate for—Concurrent findings on facts—Substantial question of law not involved—Certificate not allowed. In this case, the District Courts found in favour of the plaintiff on the point of limitation, but against him on the question of adoption. On appeal, the Chief Court held that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation and also the plaintiff had not been adopted. Thereupon, the plaintiff applied to the Chief Court for a certificate to appeal to the Privy Council. Held, there was a concurrent finding of the Chief Court and the District Court on the facts. The circumstance that, on the defendant's objection, the Chief Court found against the plaintiff on the point of limitation could not make any difference. There was thus no substantial question of law involved in the appeal to the Privy Council within the meaning of s. 596. Application for certificate rejected. RAM NARAIN v. The judgment was erroneously passed, in accordance with a case subsequently found to have been overruled by a Full Bench decision passed prior to the wrong judgment but not brought in time to the Court's notice. Under the ruling of the Full Bench, appellants should have obtained decree for the whole of the property in question; so, they applied for a review on that ground. Held, the fact that the appellants were deprived by the original decree of what they were entitled to, according to the then existing judicial decisions, constituted a miscarriage of justice, affording ground for a review. Code, 1882)—Review of judgment—Order dismissing the rule granted—Appeal—Limiation.*—An application for review commences ordinarily with an ex-parte application, under s. 623 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The Court then may either reject the application at once or may grant a rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted. In the second stage the rule may either be admitted or rejected; and it is obvious that the hearing of this rule may involve, to some extent, an investigation into the merits. If the rule is discharged then the case ends. If, on the other hand, the rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached; the case is re-heard on the merits and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it. Though in one aspect the result is the same whether the rule be discharged or on the re-hearing the original decree be repeated, in law there is material difference, for, in the latter case, the whole matter having been re-opened, there is a fresh decree. In the former case the parties are relegated to and still rest on the old decree. On the 20th Nov., 1902, an order in execution was passed; and in supplement of it a further order as to costs was made on the 20th December, 1902. On the 3rd August, 1903, the present respondent applied under s. 623 of the Civ. Pro. Code, for a review of judgment. Notice was issued to the opposite party and the application for review was heard with the result that the Court rejected the application for review on the 14th December, 1903. The respondent appealed against this order dated the 14th September, 1903, and the lower appellate Court held that there was sufficient cause for granting the review and as

There are many instances in which there can be no doubt as to the power to revise. Where there is a patent illegality or material irregularity of procedure, the application of the section cannot be doubted. For example, if a Court were to reject an application for leave to sue as a pauper explicitly on some ground not specified in s. 407, it could not be doubted that it would be "acting illegally." Or if it decided a case on a question of fact after refusing to hear witnesses on either side, it could not be denied that it had acted with "material irregularity." But where there is no illegality of so crude and obvious a kind and where the proper procedure has been observed, in cases, that is to say, where the application of the section is doubtful owing to the difficulty in distinguishing between an error of law and illegal action, the test is whether the lower Court has applied its mind to the law and the facts and come to a decision after due consideration; or, whether it has failed to take into account some proposition of law or some fact in evidence which ought to affect its decision; if the facts and the law applicable to the case have been duly considered by the lower Court, then, although its decision may be erroneous, the error cannot be corrected on revision. If, on the other hand, the lower Court has failed to consider the law or the facts, it has acted illegally and its decision may be revised. ZEYA v. Code*, 1882, s. 622)—Scope of the section—"Jurisdiction," meaning of—Order amending decree under s. 206, High Court, whether could entertain application for revision of.—On an application, to the High Court, made by a judgment-debtor for revising an order amending the decree in respect of an arithmetical error, it was held (per Oldfield, J.) that the application for revision could not be entertained, since the order sought to be revised was not open to any objection on the score of want of, or excess of, jurisdiction. Whether or not the lower Court erred, in having entertained the application, because of its bar by limitation or other grounds, are questions which do not affect the jurisdiction of that Court, so as to enable the High Court to interfere under s. 622 of the Code. (11 C. 6, 8 A. 111 R.) Held per Mahmood, J, that the Legislature, in framing s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code, has given the High Court the power and jurisdiction to interfere in the action of the subordinate tribunals in cases where there is no remedy by appeal or otherwise, and where those tribunals have either exceeded, or wrongly declined to exercise, the power and jurisdiction which the law confers upon them, or, under the pretence of exercising such power and jurisdiction, have acted against a positive prohibition of the law. The High Court had therefore power to entertain the present petition for revision for the purpose of satisfying itself whether the jurisdiction, assumed in this case by the lower Court, purporting to act under s. 206 of the Civ. Pro. Code, was rightly assumed ; and if so, whether its action in amending the decree did not exceed the authority and power which that provision of the law conferred upon that Court, and also whether that Court has not acted against some postive prohibition of the law. On the merits, the lower Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application for amendment, and, in making the amendment, its action was not ultra vires, so as to render it open to the objection of the exercise of jurisdiction "illegally or with material irregularity," within the meaning of s. 622 of the Code. On the 23rd July, the Subordinate Judge, granting the application, directed the Deputy Commissioner to postpone the sale pending the further orders of the Court, The Deputy Commissioner reported that the sale had been completed on the previous day. The Subordinate Judge subsequently confirmed the sale. The objection of the judgment-debtor, that the sale was illegal and ought not to be confirmed, was, on appeal by the judgment-debtor, considered by the District Judge. Held, that the District Judge had jurisdiction to decide the question whether the sale was a valid or invalid one. The defendant admitted the reference to arbitration, but urged that there was no award. Later on, reference to arbitration, meeting of the arbitrators, consultation between, and award by them, were denied by the defendants; it was also pleaded that the signatures of the defendants had been improperly obtained on the iqrarnama and the alleged award; and it was contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the application. on the ground that the allegations made subsequently on which the objection was founded were inconsistent with the plea put in at first. On an application for revision against the order disallowing the objection as to jurisdiction of the original Court to proceed with the application, it was contended that the application for revision did not lie, as the case had not been decided, that the decree was subject to appeal, and that the order was an interlocutory one. Held, that the contention was right. The word 'case' in s. 622, Civ. Pro. Code, does not necessarily, and in every case mean the whole case, but may mean a particular branch of case for which an independent remedy or different procedure is provided by the Code, and the meaning of the word 'case' cannot be extended further. (2117)—*S. 115 (=s. 622, Civ. Pro. The word 'case' as used in s. 115 of Act V of 1908, must ordinarily mean the whole case. But where there are independent proceedings arising out of a case, such as a proceeding to restore a case dismissed in default or to set aside a decree ex parte, for which the Legislature has provided an independent remedy or a different procedure, such proceeding may be a 'case' within the meaning of the section. Any orders on matters arising incidentally in the course of the hearing of such proceeding, the object of which is to bring on the record or to exclude from it materials upon which its decision is to be based, are not by themselves decisions in a case which can be revised until the case is finally concluded. Pro. Code, is one of very limited operation and where a lower Court has jurisdiction to decide a question of law or fact, the High Court has no power to interfere on revision with the decision on these questions. A decision by the judgment of a competent Court, whether right or wrong, which, by law, is final and without appeal, whether the Court has not acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, cannot be set aside under s. 622. The fact that the Court may have arrived at a wrong decision is not necessarily a material irregularity or a failure to exercise jurisdiction. MA TAW U v MA NGWE, L.B. A suit was referred to the sole arbitrament of the Judge into whose Court it was brought, but there was no written reference. The matters in difference submitted to the arbitration were not all included in the suit; and some of the parties to it were persons who were not in the suit at all. The award was made in 1904. The plaintiff died in 1905. No application was made in time to have a decree in terms of the award; nor was an application ever made to bring plaintiff's heirs on the record. The plaintiff's son applied on the 6th April, 1909 to have a decree passed in terms of the award, which the Court did the next day:—Held, (1) that, in acting as he did, the Judge had far exceeded his jurisdiction; (2) that the defendant should, under s. 115 of the Civ. The defendants subsequently applied to the Munsiff for review of judgment on the ground that a certain Full Bench decision, according to which the six years' period of limitation was properly applicable to the suit, had not been brought to the notice of the Court. The Munsiff applying the Full Bench ruling reviewed his decree, and dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. The appeal preferred by the plaintiff from such order granting the review was entertained and allowed by the District Judge who overlooked the fact that he had no power to set aside the order merely because he thought it unreasonable, or on any ground not mentioned in s. 629 of the Civ. An application for revision of the appellate order of the District Judge was entertained by the High Court which held that the District Judge had acted with material irregularity in having admitted and allowed the appeal from the Munsiff's order granting the review, and allowed the application, setting aside the order of the District Judge and restoring that of the Munsiff with costs. The rights that accrue to the parties up to the expiration of the period allowed for redemption are substantive rights that are out of the contract. The mortgagee's right to be paid interest at the mortgage-rate for the whole period allowed for redemption is on the same footing as the mortgagor's right to be allowed (after judgment) a definite period of time for redemption or as the mortgagee's right (in default of payment by the mortgagor) to foreclose or to sell the mortgage property. It defines the procedure to be followed by a party deserving the help of the Court, and does not confer a jurisdiction or create a right. It applies to proceedings under the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899. Though it may be contended that the Code of Civil Procedure regulates, or even limits, the Court's discretion in granting injunctions, the power to grant them is probably inherent

One of the terms of these agreements was, that "in case of any dispute whatsoever arising under this contract, the same is to be referred to two European merchants residing in Karachi, each party having the right to nominate one arbitrator." When a dispute arose, the plaintiff applied under cl. 17, sch. II of the Code of 1908, that the said agreements be filed in Court and an order of reference made to arbitrators to be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreements. The plaintiff in his application duly nominated as his arbitrator a European merchant residing at Karachi, but the defendant, though called upon to do so, failed to nominate his arbitrator. The lower Court held the terms of the agreements to be "ambiguous" and ruling that they should have "contained the name of arbitrators," nominated an Amritsar gentleman to act as arbitrator on behalf of the defendant. It also ruled that each agreement gave rise to a different cause of action and that three causes of action could not be conveniently tried together. Held, that, apart from the question of convenience, the plaintiff was justified under O II, r. 3, read with s. 141 of the Code, in asking the Court to take action in one application upon all three agreements; that, unlike the provisions of s.523 of the old Code, cl. 17 of the new Code does not require that arbitrators should necessarily be "named" in the agreement; that the fact that no persons were specially named in the agreements as the persons to be appointed did not render the agreements "ambigious" Id certum est quod certum reddi potest. (That is certain which can be reduced to a certainty); that the lower Court had no power, in contravention of the express agreements between the parties and the imperative terms of cl. 17, sch. II of the Code, to appoint as an arbitrator a person who was not a European merchant residing in Karachi, and that, in so doing, the Court committed an irregularity which materially prejudiced the plaintiff; that, as it is quite possible for the parties to nominate certain European merchants residing in Karachi as their respective arbitrators, the lower Court must deal with the case in accordance with law, and arbitrators must be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreements; and that, as the defendant had wisely or unwisely agreed to appoint as his arbitrator a European merchant residing in Karachi, it was not open to him to plead that he did not know any European merchant there. Obiter:—Parties must adhere to contracts made by them with full understanding of all the terms, and must not be allowed to resile from their agreements, simply because they subsequently find it to their interest to do so. On appeal the High Court reduced the amount of compensation. Government then applied to the Court under s. 144 of the Civ. Pro. Code of 1908, to recover interest from the claimant on the amount of difference between the sums awarded by the District Court and the High Court, from the date of its payment to the claimant down to the date of the application. The first Court disallowed the application on the ground that the High Court decree did not provide for the payment of interest and the award of interest was in the discretion of the Court: Held, reversing the order, that the claimant had the benefit of the money belonging to Government in excess of that to which the High Court had held him to be entitled; and that benefit was represented not only by the excess amount wrongly taken by the claimant from the District Court, but also by the amount of interest which it carried with it. The award of interest is, generally speaking, a matter of the Court's discretion, except where by law it is made obligatory. It is a rule of law that, where a party has wrongly taken from the Court moneys deposited in Court by his opponent, that Court has inherent power to enforce a refund of the amount with interest. A Court of appeal does not necessarily enter into the question whether a decree it is about to reverse, has been executed or not. Hence, where a mortgagee was deprived of possession of the property comprised in his mortgage in execution of a decree for redemption passed by the Subordinate Judge, but the High Court subsequently modified that decree by raising the amount payable by the mortgagor and the mortgagor failed to pay the increased amount, whereupon the mortgagee made an application to the Subordinate Judge for restitution of possession and for mesne profits, held that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction, not only to make restitution by restoring possession but also to award mesne profits, although the decree of the High Court did not specifically provide for mesne profits. The appellants resisted the suit and the first Court gave the respondent a decree for redemption of the whole village on payment of Rs. 3,652. On the 13th July, 1897, the respondent obtained possession of the village in execution of that decree. The appellate Court allowed redemption of only two-thirds of the village on payment of Rs. 8,996-3-6. On the 28th January, 1902, the respondent deposited the balance payable by him for redemption according to the appellate Court's decree. R's interest in the property was subsequently purchased by one Z and his sons. Z died in 1873. In 1877 his sons brought a suit for redemption against D. The suit was decreed by the first Court, on condition of the plaintiff's paying a certain amount of mortgage-money. They paid the amount and got possession of the property. On appeal the High Court decreed a larger amount to the mortgagee than what was decreed by the Court of first instance The excess so decreed by the High Court was not paid to the mortgagee within the fixed time. The mortgagee thereupon applied in execution to get back the property, and also prayed for mesne profits for the period during which he had been out of possession owing to the decree of the first Court. The Court awarded the mesne profits. In order to realise these, the equity of redemption was put to sale and was purchased by the mortgagee himself. Subsequently the representative of the mortgagor sold a portion of the property to P. In a suit brought by P to redeem the mortgage of 1863; held, that P had no right to redeem. Held, further, that a decree of reversal by an appellate Court contains, by necessary implication, a direction to the Court below, to cause restitution to be made of all the benefits of which the successful party in the appeal was deprived by the enforcement of the erroneous decree of the Court of first instance. The granting of restitution in such a case is not a matter purely within the discretion of the Court. On the reversal of a judgment, the law raises an obligation in the party to the record who received to the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he had lost; and such obligation it is the duty of the Courts to enforce. The person seeking restoration to the possession of which he has been wrongfully deprived by the agency of the Court, is out of possession only because the Court has wrongly put him out; and whoever is in possession is there, only because the Court has wrongly made room for him to get in. In such cases, therefore, the probable immediate effect on innocent third parties who have come into possession need not be taken into consideration. They would be in no worse position after their being put out by the Court than they would have been if the Court had never acted, and the Court could not, without so putting them out, undo its own wrong. The purchase-money was set off against the amount due under the decree, which contained no provision for future interest on the amount decreed. The sale was ultimatey set aside for irregularity. Subsequently, the respondents paid to the appellant the sum found due to him by the decree; and possession of the property was restored to them. Then the respondents applied in execution proceedings for mesne profits and interest. It was urged that the assignee of the decree was not entitled to proceed summarily in execution under s. 583 but could only get the benefit by bringing a suit and obtaining a decree in that suit. Held, that since, if there had been no assignment of decree, the holders of it, under the conjoint operation of ss. 583 and 244, could have successfully made the application in question, the present applicant as their assignee and representative is also entitled to adopt the same procedure and ought not to be driven to an independent suit. (2289-a)—Ss. 144, 151—Restitution—Auction-sale reversal of—Decree-holder, auction-purchaser—Inherent power to order restitution.—A judgment-debtor, on reversal of an execution-sale, is not only entitled to be restored to possession of the properties sold in execution, but to a refund of the profits which have been or might have been collected by the decree-holder-auction-purchaser during the period he was in possession. He is entitled to set off such mesne profits against the decretal amount. The principle upon which restitution is directed is that the Court will not permit an injustice to be done by reason of an erroneous order made by it; when that erroneous order has been reversed, the Court will restore the parties to the position which they would otherwise have occupied. The power of a Court to grant restitution is not confined to cases covered by the provisions of s. 144 of the Code. The power extends also to cases which do not come strictly within the section, because, irrespective of the section, the Court has an inherent power to order restitution. BENI MADHO v. (2339)——S. 151, O. 21, r. 29 and O. 41, r. 5—Stay of execution—Power of appellate Court.—In this case, execution of a decree of 1907 was stayed pending decision of a counter case brought by the judgment-debtor, R.B.K. against the decree-holder. That suit was dismissed and an appeal from this order of dismissal was presented to the Chief Court. R.B.K. now prayed that execution of the decree of 1907 might be stayed pending decision of the appeal. Held, that though the case is not provided for by O. 21, r. 29 of the new Code (s. 243 of the Code of 1882), s. 151 of the new Code meets the case, and the Chief Court has power to stay execution pending the appeal. It does not follow that an order cannot be passed simply because there is no express section in the Code providing for the passing of such an order. O. 21, r. 29, does not prohibit anything by implication. An appellate Court has, generally speaking, as full powers as the original Court, and, in the absence of any express provision to the contrary, the appellate Court can do, while the appeal is pending, what the original Court should do while the suit was pending before it. The decree, however, comprised a simple order of dismissal and contained no reference to the above finding. The defendant applied for a review of judgment, praying that the finding might be either expunged or modified in his favour, as it might, if allowed to stand, operate as res judicata in any subsequent suit that might be brought. On this being refused, he applied under s. 206, Civ. Pro. Code, that the decree might be brought into conformity with the judgment. The Court added a clause to the decree, to the effect that the issue relating to him had been found against him. The defendant thereupon preferred an appeal against the decree. The District Court held that the appeal was out of time. Held that so far as the appellant was concerned there was in fact no finding except with regard to the question of consideration. The decree was in conformity with the judgment and the first Court had no power to vary the decree. That being so, the words added had to be expunged and the decree restored to its original state. Per Subramania Ayyar, J. Where a decree which is at variance with the judgment is brought into conformity with it under s. 206 of the Civ. That decree was appealed against and was affirmed by the appellate Court. Subsequently, an application was made, in the Court of first instance, to amend its decree under s. 206 of the Code, so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment that it had pronounced. The Court allowed the amendment, and added an order to its decree in respect of the mesne profits. The decree-holder, subsequently, presented an application for execution of the amended decree and the question was then raised by the judgment debtors, whether that decree was not ultra vires. Held, no doubt the original Court, erroneously though it may be, entertained the application for amendment of the decree and amended its decree. (25 C. 258, 6 C. 22, 20 W.R. 11, R.) Even if the amended decree was not appealable, it was open to the judgment-debtor to move the High Court, under s. 622 of the Code, to set aside the order of the original Court, upon the ground that it had no jurisdiction to make it. S. 206 enables to Court to amend the decree, if it is found to be at variance with the

The section does not authorise the review of a decree which was right when it was made on the ground of the happening of some subsequent event. The High Court had power to amend the decree in the terms of the compromise. The decree so amended had no operation either in favour of or against the defendants who were not parties to the application for amendment. At the request of the plaintiff the Commissioner made a special report under Rule 456 of the Equity Rules of the High Court, which was confirmed by a Judge of the High Court. The question arose whether such confirming order of the Judge was open to the appeal or not, and it was held that the order being one determining a mere question of procedure and not one in any way affecting the rights of the parties, it could not amount to a decree so as to be appealable as such. It was also contended that, if the order was not a decree, it was, at any rate, an order made on a question relating to the execution of the decree referring it to the Commissioner to take the accounts, and appealable under s. 11 of Act XXIII, of 1861, but it was held that that section read as an amendment to the Civ. Pro. Code of 1859 was, in terms, confined to questions arising in the execution of decree, that is, questions arising in the enforcement of the decree on the application of one or other of the parties to it. The old equity practice of the Supreme Court was introduced into the procedure of the High Court by virtue of its power of making rules not inconsistent with the Civ. Pro. Code. The application or report of the Commissioner, asking for the instructions of the Court in carrying out its orders, was one made under such practice, and could not be regarded as an order within the contemplation of s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861. The order refusing inspection in the above proceedings which had been commenced before the 1st June, 1882, was passed subsequent to that date. The question arose whether the appealability of the order was to be determined by the Civ. Pro. Code of 1859 or of 1882. Now by s. 3 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, proceedings after decree that had been commenced and were pending on 1st June, 1882, are not governed by that Code. Where the proceeding subsequent to 1st June 1882, which forms a part of the proceedings

In the present suit, the claim was in respect of trees alleged to have been cut and removed subsequent to the institution of the previous suit and in respect of a quantity of timber which it was said had been stored on the land by the plaintiff and which also the defendant took away after the institution of the first suit. Held that the plaintiff's claim in respect of the trees cut and removed was in the nature of mesne profits. Held also that, as regards the claim for the timber stored on the land, the trespass on the land was by itself no proof of any conversion of the timber found on the land at the time the trespass took place. Notwithstanding the plaintiff's eviction from the land, the possession of the timber must be presumed to have continued in the plaintiff in the absence of proof of any act or acts on the part of the defendant with special reference to such goods, showing unequivocally that the plaintiff was entirely deprived of the use of those goods. The conversion took place only subsequent to the institution of the prior suit. The causes of action relied on in the present suit being different from those relied on in the previous suit, s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, did not operate as a bar to the present claim. MOYI v. English decisions under r. 4, O. XVI, are not applicable to s. 28, Civ. Pro. The right to sue had vested in the firm, but it was doubtful, when the suit was instituted, in which of the two plaintiffs the right to sue vested. Held, that the Court had no power, of its own motion, to strike out the name of one of the plaintiffs at that stage of the suit; the proper course would be to allow both the names to exist on the record and pass a decree, in favour of both or either, as the Court may ultimately determine. The plaint set forth that the first three plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to the property in suit as heirs of M. and that they had sold in 1892 their interest in a portion of the property in suit to plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5. Held, that the expression 'cause of action' in ss. 26 and 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be interpreted in its limited sense, so as to include the facts constituting the infringement of the right, but not necessarily also those constituting the right itself; that plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5 had the same cause of action arising from the infringement of the title of the first three plaintiffs as heirs of M by the assumption on the part of the defendants of the possession of the property in suit on the death of that lady; and that the suit was in accordance with the provisions of s. 26, Civ. [R. 13 C.P.L.R. 130]. Having regard to the language of s. 26 and that of the latter part of s. 45, the Code does not authorize the joining of plaintiffs in a suit in respect of distinct causes of action, in which they are not jointly interested and their interests are not merely conflicting, but antagonistic. The provisions contained in O. 2, Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, entitled "Frame of the Suit" must be read so as not to clash with those in the preceding order regarding "the Parties to Suits," upon the well-known principle that the construction of a statute is to be made of all the parts together and not of one part only by itself. (11 B. 133, 31 M. 252, 1 N.L.R. 4, 9 C.P.L.R. 125, R.) The cause of action against the co mortgagees for the sums paid is identical with that against the mortgagor for any balance unpaid except for the actual payments to the mortgagees. The application of O. 1, r. 3, Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, is not incompatible with the existence of some discrepancy between the causes of action against several defendants. The word "case" in s. 115, Civ. Pro. of the firm in which the first plaintiff and third defendant are partners, and the third defendant for dissolution of the partnership, the plaint alleges two distinct causes of action and therefore such a suit is not maintainable. The fact that the plaintiffs also make a claim for damages against the third defendant in the suit does not prevent the cause of action against the first defendant from being distinct from that against the third. Even if the plaintiffs were entitled to rely on the words "in respect of the same matter" in s. 28, Civ. Pro. Code, as warranting construction being placed upon the section from that which the English Courts have adopted with reference to the corresponding r. 4 of O. XVI, it cannot be said that the right to relief alleged to exist against the first defendant is in respect of the same matter as the right to relief alleged to exist against the third defendant. The matter in the one case is an alleged breach of contract by an agent of the firm. In the other case, it is the right of one partner in the firm as against the other partner, to have accounts taken, and the partnership wound up. There is the further objection to the plaint, that the plaintiff as one of the partners of a partnership firm cannot sue in his own name an agent of the firm for breach of contract with the firm, unless the cause ofaction has been in collusion with the other partner. Where the case of each defendant must be decided on its own merits without any reference to the case of another and the case of each will be different there is a misjoinder which must affect the merits of each man's case and which cannot therefore be passed over as a mere irregularity and condoned as such under s. 578, Civ. Pro. Code. (24 C. 540, considered). S. 46 Civ. Pro. Code, empowers the Court to order that a suit be confined to such of the causes of action as may be conveniently disposed of in one suit, and has no application to a case where separate causes of action are alleged against two defendants. (8 B. 616, R.) The power given to the Court by s. 53, Civ. Pro. Code, is only a discretionary power, and when a Court of first instance decides a question of misjoinder in favour of the plaintiffs in a suit, the defendant is not precluded from raising the question in appeal. Code, governs also the words "series of acts or transactions" and must be read before these words also. Before a plaintiff can join several persons as co-defendants in the same suit, two conditions must be fulfiled: first, the relief sought against the defendants, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, must arise from the same act or transaction or from the same series of act or transactions; and secondly, there must arise between the plaintiff and all the defendants some common question either of fact or law. The plaintiff may in one action unite several causes of action against several defendants provided that all such defendants are jointly liable in respect of each and all of such causes of action, and the condition precedent to the plaintiff being allowed to join several causes of action against several defendants is that such defendants must all have a joint interest in the main question raised by the litigation, and causes of action joined in one suit against several defendants must be causes of action in which the defendants are all jointly interested. It is not necessary that every defendant should be interested as to all the the reliefs claimed in the suit, but it is necessary that there must be a cause of action in which all the defendants are more or less interested, although the relief asked against them may vary. He must show that the conduct of the suit is not in proper hands or that action is being taken by the parties, who purport to represent him, in some way which is prejudicial to his interests. In an administration suit, it is extremely undesirable that individual creditors should be added as parties, unless they show some very strong reason that the person, who has filed the suit on their behalf, is not conducting it in the proper way. It is not enough that they should be willing to bear their own costs. There is considerable delay caused by a fresh party coming in, and the costs of other parties consequently are increased. (2439)—O. 1, r. 8 (1) (=s. 30, Civ Pro. Code, 1882),—Suit relating to religious and charitable endowments—Suit by persons interested—Leave to sue not condition precedent.—S. 30 of the Code dealt with procedure only and did not affect substantive rights. It was permissive and in no way prohibitive on its terms. The leave required by the section could be given at any stage of the suit and was not a condition precedent. The said section applied to two classes of cases. There are the cases in which the number of persons, who claim concurrent interests in the subject-matter, and therefore, according to strict rule, necessary parties to the suit, is so large that they cannot all be conveniently joined with any chance of the suit being brought to a conclusion. And there are the cases in which numerous persons have distinct but similar rights, which cannot be prosecuted in distinct suits. In the latter class of cases, for the sake of convenience and to prevent multiplicity of suits, the Court allows one person or a few persons to prosecute or defence suits on behalf of all the persons similarly interested. If the course prescribed by the said section was not followed in such a case, the only consequence was that the judgment did not bind the persons whose names were not on the record. To obviate this inconvenient consequence, it is competent to the Court, with the view of adjudicating completely and definitely on the matter in dispute, to require an amendment of the plaint. The omission to apply under the section was not by itself ground for dismissing the suit, but, when the objection was taken, the Court could not allow the suit to proceed, except on the terms of the plaint being amended and the requisite leave under the section being obtained. SRINIVASACHARI v. RANGACHARIAR, 7 M.L J. 281.

(2440)—O. 1, r. 8 (1) (=s 30, Civ Pro. Code, 1882—Leave to sue given after commencement of suit—Validity of leave to sue, given after previous refusal.—Leave to sue under s. 30, Civ. Pro. Code, need not necessarily precede the commencement of the action, but may be given after the suit has commenced. (21 B. 784, 23 M. 28, 22 A. 269, R.) The validity of leave to sue under s 30, Civ. Pro. Code, is not affected by the fact that leave has previously been refused, as it is entirely a matter of discretion not affecting the merits of the case, and can only have affected the defendants in the matter of costs which could be dealt with at the time the order was made. (2441)—O. 1, r. 8 (1) (=s. 30, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Leave of Court under, whether could be obtained after filing suit.—In a suit brought under s. 30 of the Civ Pro. Code, it cannot be contended that the suit cannot be maintained without first obtaining from the Court the necessary leave to sue under the section and that such leave could not be granted afterwards. Some sections in the Code which require leave to be given obviously imply that, if it is not given before suit, it cannot be given at all, and the suit must be dismissed. This is not the case, however, in suits coming under s. 30. The question raises no point of jurisdiction, and there is nothing which makes it essential that leave should be given before the filing of the suit The provision is one dealing nearly with a convenient way of bringing all the parties before the Court and has nothing to do with jurisdiction. The word "sue" used in the section ordinarily includes the whole suit and everything done in the suit, and, therefore, seems to imply that leave should be given before anything done in the suit. But there is nothing to indicate that when it is not done, the matter should not be set right on the earliest occasion afterwards. FERNANDEZ v. II, arts. 131 and 120.*— The shrine of a Mahomedan saint was at the instance of the Local Government taken charge of by the Deputy Commissioner in 1876. In April, 1890, the plaintiffs sued the defendant (Deputy Commissioner), as manager of the shrine for themselves and for the Dafali class generally, to which they themselves belonged, for the following reliefs, namely, (a) a declaration of right, i.e., their own right to a moiety of the offerings made at the shrine, and (b) a declaration of the right of the Dafali class to a moiety of the said offerings. The defendant contested the suit on the following grounds; (1) that the plaintiffs were not competent to sue on behalf of the Dafali class, (2) that the proviso to s. 42, Specific Relief Act, was a bar to the declaration sought, and (3) that the suit was time-barred under art. 120 of the Limitation Act. After the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs applied to the Court, under s. 30, Civ. Pro. Code, for permission to sue on behalf of certain other Dafalis, but the permission was refused. Held, that the plaintiffs were not competent to sue for any Dafalis but themselves. The plaintiffs as the recognised agents of certain persons could not sue in their own names on behalf of those persons unless authorized by law to do so. A person authorized by another to institute a suit on his behalf must institute the suit in the name of the principal and not in his own name, inasmuch as the legal right to sue is vested in the principal and not in him. As a general rule, all persons in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist must be joined as plaintiffs to enable the Court to give judgment in their favour. S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not contain as exception to this rule and does not authorise a person, who claims a right common to him and other persons of the same class, to sue in his own name for a declaration of the right in favour of such class or authorize the Court, when the right claimed is common to a class of persons, to give a declaration in favour of the class at the suit of one of the class. The Plaintiffs could only sue on behalf of the person whose authorized agents they were, or on behalf of the Dafali class generally, under the provisions of s. 30, Code of Civil Procedure, after obtaining the permission of the Court. Held, that the proviso to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act was not a bar to the suit. An injunction cannot be granted to compel a person to pay money, which he is under a legal obligation to pay but refuses to pay. Held, further, that the suit was governed by art. 131 of the Limitation Act, under which a period of twelve years is allowed from the time the enjoyment of the right is first refused, and that it was within time; and that even if it were governed by art. 120, it was within time. The provision in s. 30 of the Civ. Pro. This rule no doubt yields to the exigencies of particular cases and there are well established qualifications of it: one of them is power of the Court under s. 30 of the Civ. Pro. Defendants objected that the suit was bad for non-joinder of other Kasipangu holders as parties, and also contended that the suit did not lie in the Court of the District Munsiff, as its value exceeded its pecuniary jurisdiction. The other Kasipangu holders were joined as co-plaintiffs under s. 30, Civ. It is the duty of the Court to cause service of notices or the publication of advertisement. That, as regards the third defendant's rights, the relief claimed whether under s. 30 or s. 539 is purely declaratory, and such declaratory relief cannot be granted under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiffs and all the other members of the

Beri Chetty caste, being disciples of Sri Abhimana and other Hindu worshippers cannot be said to be entitled to any legal character or to any right to any property which the defendants have denied or are interested in denying within the meaning of s. 42, so as to give the Court jurisdiction to pass a purely declaratory decree. That the suit is bad under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, also because the plaintiffs do not seek any further relief, such as an injunction restraining all or some of the defendants other than the third from interferring with the third defendant's rights to the office. (33 C. 789, R.) Held also, that the suit contemplated under s. 539 is a suit against a trustee, including under that term a person assuming to act as trustee, or a trustee de son tort, by persons having an interest in the trust, for one of the reliefs specified in the section. The suit for the assertion of the rights of one of the trustees taken by itself is not a suit for one of the reliefs specified in cls. (a) to (c) of the section. Nor can it be regarded as a suit "for such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require." (17 M. 462, F.B., R.) That the declaration of the rights of the third defendant cannot be said to be incidental to a prayer for settling a scheme, as a scheme can be well settled without going into the question of the third defendant's right. That s. 539 was neither intended to bar the assertion of private rights on the one hand, nor to afford a means of asserting them on the other. That where s. 539 expressly provides for a declaratory relief, it cannot be cut down by s. 42, Specific Relief Act. Where however the case comes within the supplementary provision as to "such further other relief as the nature of the case may require," the Court ought to be guided by the provisions of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, and ought to hold that the nature of the case does not require a merely declaratory relief to be given where further relief might have been sought for. In Calcutta there is a Chinese temple and cemetery. Five members of the punti class obtained the sanction of the Advocate-General, under s. 539, and instituted the present suit against the secretary and trustee of the temple and cemetery, who was a hakalu, for a declaration that the temple and cemetery are the public property of the Chinese community and that the plaintiffs' community, including the plaintiffs, are entitled to the benefits, appertaining to the trust, for production of deeds, etc., belonging thereto and for the settlement of a scheme by the Court, and other incidental relief. On behalf of the defendant, objection was raised that the suit should have been brought under s. 30. Held, if, as alleged in the plaint, the private rights of the plaintiffs to worship at the temple have been infringed, he has a right of action under s. 539. The mere result that the interests of persons, other than the plaintiff and those persons associated with him as co-plaintiffs, will be affected, does not take away the right of an individual to sue under s. 539. The words of s. 539 contemplate that there are other persons, besides those permitted to sue, who will be affected. MAC MOCHI v. LEE CHIN, 9 C.W.N. 594.

(17 M. 462, R.) Where, in a suit relating to a trust, many others besides the plaintiff are interested, held, that, even if no sanction under s. 18, Religious Endowments Act, 1863, is necessary, permission to sue is necessary under s. 30, Civ. Such rights of suit not having been affected by s. 539 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the general trustee can maintain such a suit without obtaining any sanction under the section. The section has been intended to apply to persons who, before its enactment, had, or where believed to have, no right to take proceedings for the purposes mentioned in it. In the case of such persons, the limitation requiring previous sanction for the suit was deemed necessay for the purpose of preventing any abuse of the powers conferred on them. NELLAIYAPPA PILLAI v. I, art. 45.*—In a suit for partition, the Court passed its preliminary decree for partition directing the appointment of Commissioners for partition by metes and bounds. The Commissioners submitted their report, and the Court confirmed it. Before the final decree was drawn up, several applications were made and granted. The result was, that the plaintiff was made defendant, a defendant was made plaintiff, and a new person was added as a party to the suit. The appeal was against the last order, by the defendant, who was made plaintiff. Held, ordinarily, a judgment contains a decision as to the rights of the parties and directs what the relief granted is. The decree, which follows, is merely the formal expression of an adjudication arrived at in the judgment. After the judgment is pronounced, the parties are not required to do any act to enable the Court to frame and sign the decree, and, as provided in s. 205 of the Code, the decree has retrospective effect and bears the same date as the judgment. But, in a partition suit, the parties are required to furnish a non-judicial stamp-paper in order that the decree therein may be engrossed upon it. A partition decree to be operative must be engrossed upon the stamp-paper so furnished and until the Judge signs the decree so engrossed, it cannot be said that the suit had terminated. S. 32 of the Code authorises the Court to add a party 'at any time' in order to enable it effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. This must, however, be done before 'an effectual and complete' adjudication and settlement of the questions raised. The power of the Court depends on the question whether the case is subjudice. The order confirming the Commissioners' report in this case was only an interlocutory order made in the course of the suit and preparatory to the order, which would determine finally the rights of the parties and, on the date the order in dispute was made, there was no such adjudication and settlement. One of the aims of the present procedure-law in England as well as in India is the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits with reference to the same matter. In the present case, the addition of the person, who acquired all the rights of the original plaintiff, as a party to the suit, was eminently fitted for the avoidance of multiplicity of suits. the plaint in consequence of his being added would be obligatory. The general rule as to parties is that all persons having an interest in the object of the suit, and in whose absence the subject-matter of the suit cannot be fully investigated and disposed of, ought to be made parties, so that questions raised in it shall not be raised again between the parties to the suit, or any of them, and third parties. (5 M. 52, F.) An appellate Court has power under ss. 582 and 32 of the Code, to order that a party shall be added to a suit. (10 B. 227, F.) When an appellate Court is of opinion that a person not a party to the suit should be made a party, the proper course is to remand the case to the Court of first instance and to direct that Court to bring on the particular person as a defendant or as a plaintiff (if he consents), give him time to file his written statement and opportunity to produce evidence, and try the issues raised between him and the opposite side. suit, application to make assignees parties in case of—Auction-purchasers as parties in mortgage suit—Revision—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 622.— The plaintiff held a first mortgage on the property of the defendant. He sued the defendant for possession of the mortgaged property under a condition in the mortgage-deed. After the institution of his suit, the rights and interests of the defendant were put up to sale in execution of the decree obtained upon mortgages of later date than the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon applied to the Court praying that the purchasers of the rights and interests of the defendant should be made parties to the suit. In his application the plaintiff referred only to s. 372 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but, after notice had been issued and all parties were before the Court, the plaintiff drew the attention of the Court to s. 32 also. The Subordinate Judge held that s. 372 did not cover the case of auction-purchasers and on that ground he rejected the application without considering it on the merits. The plaintiff applied to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner for revision of the Subordinate Judge's order. Held, that s. 372 of the Civ. Pro. Code covered the plaintiff's case and that the auction-purchasers should be added as parties. Held, further, that, inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge failed to exercise the jurisdiction which s. 372, Civ. Pro. Code, gave him in not dealing with the plaintiff's application on its merits and to consider whether that application should be granted under s. 32, Civ. Pro. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved. In the suit in this case, the plaintiffs were three in number and they claimed to be declared sharers of one-half and one of the defendants a sharer in the other half of the property set forth in the plaint list. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 claimed title through the deceased owner, and it was set forth in the plaint that they had sold one half of their half share to plaintiff No. 3 who had also, on that account, joined in the suit. On behalf of the defendants it was contended that the suit was bad for misjoinder since the cause of action of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 was distinct and separate from the cause of action of plaintiff No. 3; and that, although the plaintiffs alleged a wrongful withholding of possession from them jointly, and they were mutually interested in defeating the defendants in the suit, the first two plaintiffs on the one hand and the third plaintiff on the other, had not, within the meaning of s. 45 of the Civ. Pro. Code, any cause of action, at the date of the suit, in which they were jointly interested. It was also pleaded that the suit was bad as contravening the provision in the second paragraph of s. 31 of the Code. The above pleas of the defendant were upheld on second appeal and the High Court held that the cause of action of the third plaintiff was distinct from the cause of action of the other two, that they were not jointly interested in the cause of action set forth in the plaint, that there was therefore misjoinder, and further that the three plaintiffs were not entitled jointly to bring or maintain one suit in respect of their separate causes of action. Objection was taken by the defendants on the ground of misjoinder but overruled, and the suit was eventually decreed. On appeal the divisional Judge dismissed the suit as bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. Held, that the order of dismissal was wrong, as the rights of jats and the butchers were not antogonistic, their causes of action were not distinct within the meaning of s. 31 of the Civ. —Hindu Law—Interest of all members inseparable—Limitation.—Per Karamat Husain, J. (Chamier, J., dubitante). In an action for sale upon a mortgage of joint family property, when some only of the members of the joint family are made defendants their rights and interests in the joint family property are neither defined nor separable from the rights and interests of those who are not before the Court. The Court, therefore, cannot proceed to deal, under O. 1, r. 9, Civ. Pro. Code, with the matter in controversy, so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. Certain property was mortgaged to the plaintiff's father. Portions of the property were subsequently sold and a portion was purchased by one B. In a suit for sale, one of the minors in B's family was not made a defendant. Objection as to non-joinder was taken at the earliest possible opportunity, but it was not brought to the notice of the Court till after the period of limitation for bringing a suit against the minor had expired. Held, that the minor could not be impleaded subsequently, as the suit against him was barred by limitation. One Revchand who was a defendant in the suit died on 18th October, 1893, leaving him surviving a minor son named Lakhmichand who attained majority on the 7th February, 1907. He made an application on the 16th April, 1910 for bringing him on the record and for issuing a commission to effect a partition according to the rights declared in the partition-decree: Held, that the suit abated as soon as the Civ. Pro. Code of 1908 came into force, so far as regarded the applicant's father who was a party, and the application to set aside the abatement by adding the applicant as the legal representative, not having been made within sixty days, was barred by art. 171 of the Limitation Act of 1908. That, in a partition suit, all the parties should be before the Court; and there was nothing in the Civ. Pro. H denied S's right to the estate of B and stated that a suit for the whole estate had been brought against S by the appellant. The Court of first instance decreed S's claim in part. At the time when the decree was passed, the appellant's suit was pending. H appealed to the District Judge and S filed objections under s. 561, Civ. Pro. Code. At this stage, the appellant's suit against S was decreed. The appellant then applied to have her name entered on the record of the lower appellate Court in place of that of S in the suit for arrears of rent. The District Judge held that the appellant was entitled to have her name added to, not substituted for, that of S as a respondent. Held, that the appellant had no right to thrust herself as plaintiff into the suit for arrears of rent which was brought by a person who had no right to bring it. He did not make A, a member of the joint family, and his sons, defendants in the suit, on the allegation that A and his sons had separated from the family, taking their share. The defendants in the suit insisted that A and his sons should be impleaded in the suit. A and his sons stated that they had separated from the family and they were not necessary parties. The lower Court made them parties. An appeal was preferred against that order. Held, that it is a general rule, a rule, upon which s. 32, of the old Code, 1882, and O. 1, r, 10, of the new Code, 1908, is founded, that all persons interested ought to be made parties, so that the Court may be enabled to do complete justice, by deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested, and that there are some special features in a partition-suit, which make it obligatory that all persons, interested in it and likely to be affected by it, should appear in the case either as plaintiffs or defendants. The expression "all questions involved in the suit" found in O 1, r 10, cl. 2, Civ. Pro. Code, 1908 (=s. 32 of the old Code), would in a partition suit include not only the questions arising out of the plaint, but of the plaint considered along with the statement of the defence. S. 32 of the old Code, 1882, is taken from r. 11, O. 16 of the rules of the English Supreme Court, 1883. The Courts ought to construe the words of s. 32 as largely as they can, in order to carry out in an effective manner the object with which it was incorporated in our Code. AMRUT v. contemplate that, upon the addition of defendants to a suit, a cause of action different from that upon which the suit was founded, which may have accrued to the plaintiff against the added defendants, should be added to the claim. All that the section requires is that, when a defendant is added, the plaint should be amended in such a manner as may be necessary, and an amended copy of the summons served on the defendants. The amendment there referred to is such amendment as is necessitated by the addition of a defendant, and not such an amendment as would add to or alter the nature of the suit as originally brought. In the present case one R.D. brought a suit against two persons, M and G, claiming to recover certain cash, and jewels belonging to one Sahai, deceased. To that suit B.R. and B who had previously brought a suit for certain immoveable property belonging to the same estate, applied to be, and were added as defendants. After this H.L., the son of R D., brought a suit claiming possession of a house which originally belonged to Sahai, and which was alleged to be then in the possession of B.R. and B. Held that it was not necessary for R.D. under s. 33, Civ. Pro. Code, to amend his plaint when B R and B were added as defendants, so as to include the present claim by his son for the house; and that the present claim was not barred by reason of s. 43 of the Code. No objection was taken to the suit in the first Court on the ground that the plaintiff was not the only Malguzar, and the only main issue, whether the alleged tenancy existed, was decided in plaintiff's favour. On appeal, the defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable, inasmuch as the plaintiff did not purport to sue as representative of the entire proprietary body; and the District Judge accepted the contention as sound. On second appeal, it was urged that the objection for want of parties must be deemed to have been waived by the defendant, the same not having been raised at the earliest possible opportunity, as required by s. 34 of the Code; also that the entire body of the landlords need not be represented on the record, where one of them seeks to eject an alleged trespasser. With regard to the first contention, held, that the objection for want of parties must be taken in all cases before the first hearing; otherwise it must be deemed to have been waived by the defendant, (14 M. 498, 7 C. 594, F.) As to the second point, held, that one member of a proprietary body is, as against every person but his co-proprietors, entitled to the possession of every part of the common lands. In such a case, one of the members suing a mere tespasser without joining the others as plaintiffs should be given at least a decree for joint possession with the defendants to the extent of the plaintiff's share in the property even when the defendant had taken the objection as to non-joinder of the other members in proper time. Pro. Code, 1882, all objections for want of parties have to be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and, in all cases, before the first hearing, any such objection not so taken is to be deemed to have been waived by the defendant; but this provision does not entitle the plaintiff to a measure of relief larger than the right he really possesses. If the plaintiff merely asks for a relief larger than the fact asserted by him would warrant, he would not necessarily be debarred altogether from any relief to which, on the facts proved, he might be entitled (10 M. 322, 14 M. 498, 26 B. 141, 8 Bom. L.R. 99, R.) A member of a Mitakshara joint family is, regard being had to his position as such in relation to any portion of the family property, entitled, as against a trespasser or a person who seeks wrongfully to seize the property in execution of a decree obtained against a stranger, to recover possession or to ask for a declaration that the properties are not liable to be sold in execution as the properties of the alleged judgment-debtor. Every member of Mitakshara family in the position of the plaintiff in the present suit, is interested in the whole of the property, subject to the rights of his co-parceners. If, therefore, a member finds that the property in which he is jointly interested is about to be seized in execution as the property of a stranger who has no title therein, he is entitled to maintain an action to prevent the impending mischief. If the decree-holder insists that the co-parceners of the plaintiff should be brought on the record and if the objection is taken in time, they may be added as party-defendant; but the plaintiff is clearly entitled to maintain the action and to obtain the necessary declaration. further litigation, the Court may, in its discretion, disregard the objection, if not raised at the proper stage. Under s. 578 of the Code, the appellate Court is not entitled to reverse the decree of the lower Court, on the ground that the co-parceners of the plaintiff have not been joined on the record, unless the appellate Court is satisfied that that omission has affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. The Court must, in a case of this description, look to the essential justice of the case, and keep in view the substance and merits, rather than strict adherence to what turns out, as in this case, to be a matter of form (2 M.I.A. 353, 6 M.I.A. 393, 6 A. 57, R.) The misconstruction of a document is not necessrily a ground for second appeal, unless the document is one which is the foundation of the suit, being in the nature of a contract or document of title. The mere fact, that some portion of the evidence is in writing, and the Judge makes a miske as to the meaning of it, does not afford a ground for second appeal. DURSUN SINGH v. (2510)—O. 2, r. 1—Partition-suit — Mesne profits for period during which suit is pending.—In applying the provisions of s. 7, Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, the first thing to be considered is whether the cause of action in the second suit is the same as the cause of action in the first. If the cause of action be the same, the second suit is barred in respect of any portion of the claim omitted from the first suit; but not otherwise. Accordingly, where the plaintiff sued as a member of an undivided Hindu family, and for a share of a particular portion of the family property, leaving the rest undivided, and his suit was rejected, as it had not been brought for his whole share, it was held that this suit was no bar to a second suit to have the whole property divided, as the causes of action in the two suits were entirely distinct. In a suit for partition of hereditary property, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to trace back his genealogy to the original grantee, and to prove that no other descendant of that grantee except himself and the defendants are in existence. It is sufficient for him to show that he and they are the only representatives of the person who last held the property. If others claim a share, it is for them to show that they have any rights which operate to restrict the plaintiff's prima facie right to treat such property of himself and the defendants. There is no objection to the award of mesne profits or interest during the whole period for which a suit is pending however long that period may be. KABAJIBIN RANOJI ET AL v. Code, 1877)—Suit for rent—Declaration of title to rent.*—The plaintiffs, sons by the second wife, sued the defendant, a son by the first wife, for Rs. 96 odd as their share of the rents of certain houses which had belonged to their deceased father. The defendant pleaded that the father had gifted away the houses in his life-time to his mother and he was in possession on his mother's account. Held that, as the plaintiffs were not in possession of the house and had never realized the rents thereof, they could not obtain a decree for rent, unless their right of inheritance and possession of the property were decreed in their favour. Civ. Pro. Code (Acts V of 1908, XIV of 1882, X of 1877, XXIII of 1861 and VIII of 1859)—continued.

—Cause of action for a suit for partition—Whether it is necessary to claim partition in the suit for a divorce—Buddhist Law—Husband's suit for divorce—Wife's denial of allegations of misconduct.—The appellant and the respondent were Burmese Buddhists and husband and wife. The appellant filed a suit against the respondent for dissolution of the marriage, on the ground that the respondent had, by sundry fraudulent devices, stolen certain jewels which were the property of the appellant, and prayed for a decree on that ground. The respondent filed her written statement denying the allegations as to her misconduct and asking that the suit be dismissed. Witnesses were summoned, but on the day fixed for hearing, the respondent abandoned her defence and, although continuing to deny her guilt, consented to a divorce. Judgment was thereupon given for a decree "as prayed for." Afterwards the appellant brought the present action for the recovery of his property which he alleged his divorced wife still fraudulently kept in her possession, and for a partition of their joint property. The respondent contended that the divorce had been by consent and had not been granted by reason of her fault. The first Court decreed the suit. The respondent appealed and, some time after she filed her memorandum of appeal, raised for the first time the point that the present suit of the appellant was barred under the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 42 and 43 as he had failed to ask for a partition of the joint property in the previous action for divorce. The Court of appeal dismissed the suit on that ground alone. Held, that the proceedings at law disclosed, not an agreement between husband and wife, but a claim by the husband on a specific ground to which the wife in effect submitted, and that the divorce was granted on the ground of a matrimonial offence on the part of the wife: Held, also, that the objection founded upon the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XI of 1882), ss. 42 and 43, should have been treated as a preliminary point, and as no notice of it was given by the respondent in the present action either in her defence, or at the trial, or in the grounds of appeal as first delivered, she was too late to raise the point in the Court of Appeal, except upon terms which would have indemnified the appellant for the omission to raise it at the proper time. Held, further, that the cause of action for the divorce was the misconduct of the wife, but the cause of action for the suit for partition was the divorce of the wife founded on that misconduct, and that the present suit was not barred by ss. 42 and 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, lastly, that partition might no doubt be treated as relief consequential upon the divorce, and therefore dealt with in the same suit, but there was not necessarily any hardship on the defendant in severing the two matters, and, if the Court should be of opinion that a petitioner had unnecessarily severed his claim for a partition from his claim for a divorce, it might, of course, punish the plaintiff by the exercise of its discretion as to costs, but such a severance did not come within the mischief aimed at by ss. 42 and 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so as to bar the claim for partition which might be founded on the decree for divorce itself. In that suit, he did not claim mesne profits accruing due up to the date thereof. In the present suit, he claimed the mesne profits due to him in respect of the land up to the date of the previous suit also. The question for decision was whether the present suit, so far it concerned the claim for mesne profits accruing before the date of the first suit, was barred by the provisions of s. 43. Held, "cause of action" means every fact which is material to be proved to entitle a plaintiff to succeed and every fact which the defendant would have a right to traverse. The cause of action in a claim to recover possession of immoveable property is identical with the cause of action in a claim for the mesne profits of that property. Recovery of possession and mesne profits constitute the whole of the claim, which a plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, and, in accordance with the provisions of s. 43, if he omits to sue in respect of a portion of the claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion omitted. The words "cause of action" in Rule A of s. 44 are not used in their ordinary meaning and are simply equivalent to "claim." The obscurity of s. 44 is no reason for disregarding the plain rules given in s. 43. The question was answered in the affirmative. MA NYEIN v. MA KON, 3 L.B.R. 56.

(2536)—O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 7, Civ. Pro. Code, 1859)—Splitting claim.—S. 7, Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, is inoperative against the splitting of a claim into parts; the effect of an infringement of that direction is not that the suit, which does not include the whole claim, shall for this reason be barred. The words "in bar of suit" refer to any subsequent suit brought for the portion of the claim relinquished in the previous suit, and not to such previous suit itself. A plaintiff, who omits to sue for a portion of his claim, stating that he does not relinquish it but means to sue again for it, can gain nothing by such a statement. Neither can such a statement bar the first suit. MUSSUMAT SOONDER BEBEE v. KHILLOO MALL, 2 N.W.P. 90. [R., 32 M. 76; Doub., 19 M.L.J. 10.]

The mortgage contained a personal covenant to repay the said loan after a certain date, then long since passed, with interest thereon at a stated rate. The suit being called on for hearing, the plaintiff applied under s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. The plaintiff, the landlord, had instituted two suits in respect of each moiety against A only and recovered judgment. At the time of the first suit, the claim for rent up to 15th December, 1901 had accrued due, but was omitted to be included in the suit. At the time of the second suit, the claim for rent for faslies 1310 and 1311 in respect of S's moiety had accrued, but were not included in the suit. The present suit was against both A and B for rent for 6 faslies from 1310 to 1315. The Sub-Judge dismissed the suit as regards the claim for faslis 1310 and 1311 in respect of S's moiety and the claim for rent up to 15th December, 1901 as regard R's moiety, as barred by s. 43, Civ. to be claimed in the former suits is at an end; for that section provides that the plaintiff shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion omitted. Held also that B was liable for the rent of faslis 1310 and 1311. Quære:—Whether the rule in King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494, that a joint promisor is not liable in a subsequent suit, when judgment had been recovered against the co-promisor is applicable to the Mofussil in India, in view of s. 43 of the Contract Act. Held, further that s. 43 of the Contract Act does not lay down a mere rule of procedure, but makes the liability of each co-promisor joint and several. Under English law, however, the foundation of the rule in King v. Hoare is that the liability of the joint promisor is joint, and that the cause of action which is one and indivisible transit is rem judicature, and is therefore not available for a subsequent suit against a co-promisor. Held, also, that as the claim for rent for faslis 1310 and 1311 was not the subject-matter of the previous suits, the cause of action for the same had not merged in the previous judgments. Under s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, although a subsequent suit against the same defendant is barred for rents which had accrued due, it is by the force of a special rule that relief not claimed in respect of a cause of action shall not be claimed in a subsequent suit, and not on the principle of merger in a judgment recovered. Where, therefore, the mortgagee sued, after the expiry of the five years, only for the interest, and failed to claim the principal which was also due, held, that he was precluded by the provisions of s. 43, Civ. In 1901, the plaintiff tendered the amount of the principal to the defendant but it was not accepted. The plaintiff then filed a suit, under s. 62 of the Transfer of Property Act, to recover possession of the mortgaged property, and at the same time under s. 83 of the Act deposited the amount of the principal in Court as the amount payable on the mortgage. The Court passed a decree for possession. In 1904, the plaintiff filed another suit to recover mesne profits from the defendant from the date of the deposit to the date when he recovered possession of the mortgaged property in execution of the redemption decree in the first suit. The lower appellate Court disallowed the claim on the ground of res judicata. Held, that the present claim was barred either under s. 13 or 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code, for, the profits derived by the mortgagee, after a proper tender made or after the amount due had been deposited in Court, were profits for which he had to account to the mortgagor in virtue of a liability tacked on, so to say, by the statute to the mortgage contract, and, as such, a claim to them by the mortgagor was one arising from and connected with his right to redeem or recover possession of the property. It was all one cause of action which might and ought to be alleged by the mortgagor in his suit to recover possession. RUKHMINIBAI v. VENKATESH, 9 Bom. This cannot be overridden by an agreement between the debtor and the creditor that separate suits might be brought. Where there are several breaches of covenants made under one contract, one way of looking at the matter is that, at the date of the latter breach, the right of action based on the earlier breach, if it is not barred by limitation, is merged in that arising out of the latter breach. All the covenants to be performed under any contract, before the suit is brought, are to be treated as joined and merged into one by the contract, and the breach of all the covenants, enforcible before that time, deemed as one breach. In the present suit he claimed rent for such last-mentioned period. The defendant contended that the claim was barred under s. 43 of the Code, so far as such period was concerned and that notice given under s. 63 of the Tenancy Act cannot give the plaintiff a fresh and independent cause of action for the balance then due, without also suing for arrears due up to the date of the suit. Held, that, as his cause of action in the previous suit was the non-payment of certain arrears of rent, he, having regard to s. 43 of the Code, ought to have claimed all arrears of rent due at the date of the institution of the suit, and that, having failed to do so, he was not entitled to claim, in the present suit, rent for the period omitted in that suit; that the deposit of rent under s. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be treated as equivalent to part-payment and that notice of deposit under s. 63 of the Act does not give a fresh and independent cause of action in respect of the balance then due. She made a gift of the holding to them and put them in possession. Therefore, the Malguzar sued to set aside the deed of gift and to obtain possession of the lands. He obtained a decree to the effect that the deed of gift was invalid and that he was entitled to buy the lands at a price to be fixed by a Revenue Officer. Plaintiff then applied to a Revenue Officer, and had the price fixed, and after paying it into the treasury, sued out execution under his decree. Pro. Code. (Per Muthusami Aiyar, J.) Before the expiry of a lease, certain lands comprised under the lease were sold in execution of a decree and the lessee was evicted from those lands by the purchaser. The Court-sale was due to the default of the lessee to pay off a certain mortgage-debt of the lessor, the major portion of which the lessee had contracted to pay. The lessee now sued for damages for breach of the implied covenant for quiet enjoyment. Plaintiff contended that the purchaser was merely a benamidar for his lessor. Held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover from defendant damages on account of his loss of possession of the lands, as the sale thereof was the result of plaintiff's own default. As the mortgage-debt was one fastened on the property included in the lease, plaintiff could safely have paid the excess claim also and added it to the amount payable to himself on redemption. Held also that, even if the purchaser was a mere benamidar for the defendant, that fact could not be allowed to weigh against the defendant, as the sale was directly the result of plaintiff's default. On partition, the land in dispute fell into the plaintiff's share. He sued the defendant for possession of the land, treating him as a trespasser. It was held that the defendant was a tenant, and no suit for possession could be brought against him. The plaintiff's prayer to get declaratory relief alone was rejected by the Court, as having been advanced at a very late stage of the case in second appeal. The plaintiff then brought the present suit for a declaration as to his title to the lands in dispute. Held, that the latter suit was barred under the provisions of s. 43 of the Code, inasmuch as, where a plaintiff claims a remedy, to which he is not entitled, in respect of a certain cause of action, and does not claim a remedy, to which he is entitled, he cannot claim the latter in a subsequent suit founded on the same cause of action. (2594)—O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Test about the application of—Causes of action, identity of.—Held, that the test of the applicability of s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, is not whether, at the date of the previous suit, the plaintiffs might or even ought to have alleged the existence of the cause of action upon which the second suit rests, but whether the causes of action alleged in the plaints in the two cases are one and the same or are distinct. In a previous suit brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the defendants had no right in certain land beyond that of ordinary tenants, they alleged that their cause of action arose in 1904, when the Revenue Courts, in a suit brought by the defendants to contest a notice of ejectment, decided that they had rights superior to those of ordinary tenants. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs ought to have sued for possession. The plaintiffs, thereupon, brought the present suit for possession of the allegation that their cause of action arose in 1899, when the defendants, on the strength of an erroneous settlement entry recording them in possession of the lands, dispossessed the plaintiffs' tenants who were actually in possession. Held, that the present suit was founded upon a cause of action which was essentially different from that on which the previous suit was based and was therefore not barred by s. 43 of the Code. (2595)—O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Execution—Claim to attached property on two titles—Release of attachment by one order under s. 280—Two distinct suits by decree-holder, if maintainable—Suits filed on same day, order of filing how determined—Where the plaintiffs brought two distinct suits under s. 283, Civ. Pro. Code, each relating to one of two items of property released from attachment in execution of their money-decree, the latter of the two suits so filed was held to be barred by s. 43 of the Code. The cause of action was the order under s. 280 of the Code which had been obtained by the defendant, the objector, and the right and title of the plaintiffs to bring the subjects of the attachment to sale in execution of their decree. The mere fact that the plaintiff's judgment-debtors held or were alleged to hold portions of the property under different titles could not split the plaintiff's cause of action into separate ones. Nor could the defendant's allegation of different titles in herself to different portions of the property split up the cause of action. S. 43 of the Code has nothing to do with the evidence which may be necessary or may be produced to support or defeat an alleged cause of action or with the desire of a plaintiff to bring more suits than one. In the case of two suits brought into Court on the same day it must be presumed, for the purposes of s. 43, until the contrary is proved, that the suits were presented and admitted in the order in which their numbers appear in the register. Held, per Aikman, J. dissenting, that, though it was the order in the execution department which necessitated the plaintiffs' suit, yet, since on the case set up by them their real causes of actin were the two different transactions entered into between judgment-debtors and the objector, they were entitled to bring separate suits. Pro. Code, does not bar a subsequent suit by him for possession of the land. A plaintiff, who has been forcibly dispossessed of immoveable property by a person having no title, can sue for possession simply on the strength of the possession which he had before he was dispossessed; provided he sues within the twelve years' period allowed by art. 142 of the 2 Schedule of the Limitation Act. In such a suit, unless defendant proves title, plaintiff should succeed without being asked to prove his own title to ownership; and even if the defendant proves that he (plaintiff) has no such title, s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act does not expressly take away this remedy, and was not intended to do so. One suit was for settlement of accounts under s. 165, Tenancy Act, against the defendant in his capacity as co-sharer, and the other was for share of profits under s. 164 in the defendant's capacity as lambardar. Held, that the suits were of different descriptions, and the causes of action for the two suits were not the same, inasmuch as the Legislature, by enacting ss. 164 and 165, Tenancy Act, contemplated two classes of suits. R executed a sale-deeed in favour of one M by which he professed to convey to his vendee for a consideration of Rs. 2,000 not only the house but the land on which it stood. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted a suit against R and M for a declaration of his proprietary right to the land on which the house stood, for cancelment of the sale in so far as it purported to convey the land, and for arrears of rent. He obtained a decree in his favour on all the three heads. Two years hence, he brought a suit wherein he claimed as zemindar's haqq-i-chaha-ram Rs. 500 or one-fourth of the price paid by the vendee for the purchase of the house of R. Held that the plaintiff was not barred from maintaining the second suit under s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, that the cause of action for the first suit was the wrongful act of R, in selling to his vendee the land on which his house stood and of which he was not the proprietor but a lessee, that the plaintiff became entitled to his due as zemindar by the lawful act of R in selling the house and that the plaintiff's cause of action in the second suit, was not the same as in the first suit, and that, further, Rule (a) of s. 44, Civ. (2610)—*O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. He added the former zemindar because he was personally liable for arrears of revenue due by him, and his vendees because their liability arose in respect of their holding the property on which the arrears had accrued. Subsequently, the same plaintiff instituted the present suit for moneys connected with the latter kist of 1286 fasli and the yearly kist of 1287 fasli. Held that this subsequent suit was not barred by s. 43 of the Code. The former zemindar who was a necessary party in the former suit was not liable for the present claim. So, if the plaintiff had included his present claim also in the former suit, his claim would have been liable to be defeated on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action. the plaintiff. As a result of these transactions, the plaintiff debited Rs. 2,753 in the general account which was in the name of the defendant. The plaintiff then brought suit No. 193 of 1899 against the defendant to recover the balance due on this general account; and a few days later he brought another suit No. 196 of 1899 for the purpose of enforcing certain rights under the sub-mortgage. The first suit was decided in the plaintiff's favour; but the second was thrown out on the ground that it was barred under s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. SESHA AYYAR v. KRISHNA AYYANGAR, 24 M. 96=12 M.L.J. 383.

(2621)—O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1877)—Omission by mortgagee to sue for one of several remedies.—It was stipulated in a mortgage-bond that in default of regular payment of interest at the time fixed, the mortgagee might at his option, either foreclose and sue for possession before the expiry of the mortgage-term, or sue for the money by enforcement of the lien. Default having occurred in payment of interest, he sued for possession before the expiry of the mortgage-term after foreclosure proceedings taken. This suit having been rightly dismissed as premature (the terms of the bond notwithstanding), he sued for the enforcement of the lien. Held that this suit was not barred under s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code, as, under the law, he was not entitled, at the time of the first suit, to the remedy sought therein, and therefore, was not entitled to more than one remedy in respect of the same cause of action, i.e., the failure of the mortgagor to pay interest in time. (2622)—O. 2, r. 2, (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1877)—Decree against mortgagor enforcing lien—Subsequent suit against purchaser to enforce decree.—A mortgagee obtained a decree against a mortgagor for the enforcement of the lien. He was resisted in bringing the mortgage to sale by a purchaser of the property in execution of a money-decree who was not made a defendant in the suit against the mortgagor. He brought a suit against such purchaser for a declaration that such property is liable to be sold under his decree. Held that second suit was not barred by the provisions of s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code. BEHRAICHI CHAUDHURI v. SURJU NAIK, 4 A. 257=A.W.N. 1882, 7. [R., L.B.R. 1893-1900, 14.]

(2623)—O. 2, r. 2, (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1877)—Money-decree or mortgage-bond, suit by assignee of—Whether he has lien on property sold—Registration.—An assignee of a money-decree on a specially registered mortgage-deed sued to establish a lien on the mortgaged property subsequently sold. Held that the decree obtained under the mortgage-deed could not be held to be non-assignable and so incapable of execution, because the bond itself, being registered under s. 52 of the Registration Act, 1866, could not be sued upon by the assignee summarily and s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, could not be pleaded as an answer to this suit; for, the mere fact of a mortgagee obtaining a money-decree will not of itself destroy the lien againt third persons who may have acquired the property from the mortgagor after the mortgage and the existence of a money-decree is no bar to his enforcing the lien against such third parties. The question for decision was whether the present suit was not barred under s. 43 of the Code by virtue of a previous unsuccessful suit by the plaintiff for recovery of the mortgage-money. Held, that the suit was not barred, the right claimed in the previous suit being the recovery of the mortgage-money by the sale of the property, which was quite different from the right claimed in the present suit, viz., possession of the mortgaged property. (2631)—O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—When subsequent suit barred.—H executed a sale-deed to the plaintiff whereby he sold his share in a village. On that very day, he executed a simple mortgage-deed to the plaintiff in respect of his share in another village. A obtained a decree against H and in execution of the decree attached both the property which had been sold as well as that which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff. The plaintiff objected to the attachments and both his claims were disallowed. Then he brought a suit for a declaration that the property purchased by him from H was not liable to be sold in execution of A's decree. He obtained a decree in that suit as prayed for. Subsequently he brought the present suit for a declaration that the property mortgaged to him by H was not liable to be sold in execution of A's decree. Held that it was questionable whether the suit was barred by s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, as the former suit had reference to the property purchased, that the order dismissing the claims must be taken as giving separate causes of action, that the titles were different, the properties were distinct, situate in different villages, and the attachments were distinct, and it was therefore questionable whether the plaintiff was bound to have included in the previous suit the relief claimed in the present suit. (2632)—O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Limitation Act, XV of 1877, art. 97—Contract to sell—Decree for specific performance—Failure of suit for possession—Subsequent suit for recovery of amount paid.—The defendant agreed to convey certain property belonging to him and his son to the plaintiff. Disputes having arisen before the conveyance was executed, plaintiff sued for specific performance and got a decree, in pursuance of which the price was fully paid and a conveyance was executed. Plaintiff not having been given possession, sued for possession. It was then found, that the sale did not bind the son's interest in the property, and that, though the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the father's share, a division ought not to be effected on the ground of the inconvenience attending the division of the house. Plaintiff was awarded the value of the defendant's share, and the present suit was to recover the balance of the price paid, on the ground of failure of consideration to the extent of the son's share. The defendant contended that the suit was one for breach of contract to convey, and that plaintiff should have claimed damages as an alternative relief in the suit for specific performance, and that s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, was therefore a bar to the present suit. He further contended that the suit was barred by limitation. Held that the contract to sell having been specifically enforced, no question as to its breach arose and the suit was really one for recovery of money the consideration for which had failed. The cause of action in the present suit was entirely different from that in the suit for specific performance, and s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, had no application. Held also that the suit was not barred by limitation. The failure of consideration must be taken to have occurred when it was found in the suit for possession that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the son's share. The present suit was within three years from that date and was, therefore, within time under art. 97 of the Limitation Act. VENKATARAMA AYYAR v. Code, 1882)—Sale—Supersession thereof by subsequent agreement—Dismissal of suit by vendee to recover property sold—Subsequent suit by him to recover money paid—Suit whether barred.*—Subsequent to the execution of a sale-deed, the parties agreed that in supersession thereof a new sale-deed, should be executed by the vendor in respect of properties less than those comprised under the first sale-deed. But the first document have been registered, the vendee sued to recover possession of the properties comprised thereunder. The suit was however dismissed on the ground that the first sale had been superseded. He therefore sued to recover the money paid by him as for failure of consideration. Held that the present suit was not barred by s. 43 of the Code. The plaintiff, when suing for the possession of the land for which he had paid the money, could not have anticipated the necessity to claim the re-payment of his purchase-money, and he therefore could not be expected to claim it in that action. The obligor made default. The obligee sued for interest that accrued due up to the date of suit and in the plaint stated that he was willing to accept the principal and subsequent years' interest at the times fixed in the bond. Having obtained a decree for interest alone, the obligee sued subsequently for the principal amount and the interest which accrued due later on. Held that as the alternative provision in the bond was inserted for the exclusive benefit of the obligee, he had an option to sue either for the arrears of interest only, or for the same together with the principal amount. It was not necessary that he should manifest his intention of waiver by some overt act which could not be re-called. The institution of the suit and obtaining a decree for the arrears of interest showed that he had exercised the option. The subsequent suit was in consequence not barred by s. 43, Civ. Pro, Code. (2636)—*O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. In such a case there is no deed to dismiss both the suits, the decree in either may stand, provided the decree in the other is reversed, when it will not be open to the plaintiff to sue in respect of the sum claimed in the suit in which the decree is reversed. So, when the obligee sued for three years' arrears of interest, as provided in the latter alternative in the bond, without suing for the principal then long overdue, he conclusively adopted the said latter alternative which reduced the obligation to this, viz., that the interest should be paid periodically while the principal and any interest in arrears stood as a charge against the mortgaged property. A second suit brought by him for the further interest since accrued due was held to be maintainable and not be deemed to be barred by s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code. As the interest fell due under the second alternative which the obligee had conclusively elected to take advantage of, there was nothing to prevent him from separately suing for arrears of interest as it became due. (2639)—*O. 2, r. 2 (=s. 43, Civ. Pro. For a portion of the fee, R executed a promissory note, and the balance was agreed to be set off against R's fee for conducting a case of P in a Civil Court. After R's death, P sued the defendant on the promissosy note and got a decree. He then brought this suit for recovery of the balance, which was to be set off, and also a further sum for subsequent attendance, on the ground that, R having died, he (R) could not perform his part of the contract. Held, that the suit was barred by the provisions of s. 43. The causes of action of the two suits were in reality the same, that is, the breach of the agreement to pay Rs. 100 per diem, and the fact that a promissory note was given, in satisfaction of part of the debt, did not take the case out of s. 43. When the plaintiff brought his first suit, R was dead, and he could fall back upon the original agreement. But the suit for fees for subsequent attendance was not barred. PREO, NATH MUKERJI v. After partition, in 1898, the plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of a portion of the premises which had fallen to their share. In the prior suit, they had not included in their claim the portion now in dispute: Held, that, the plaintiffs being prima facie entitled to recover possession of the premises, it lay upon the defendants to bring the case within s. 43 of Act XIV of 1882. II, arts. 142, 144.*—One of two tenants-in-common, having sued for partition of part of the property held by them as such, is not barred by s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code from bringing a separate suit in respect of the remainder of the property. In applying s. 43, it has to be seen whether the cause of action alleged in the plaint in the subsequent suit is identical with the cause of action alleged in the former suit. Where there has been an infringement of one right and one cause of action has arisen, the plaintiff must make his whole claim once for all in one suit.

The right and the part of a tenant-in-common to have each field separately divided between himself and his co-tenant is one thing : the right to claim a partition of all the fields held by them as tenants-in-common is another thing, and the circumstance that there has been an adjudication as to certain parcels of land on the footing of an alleged right of the former sort, would not preclude a subsequent general suit for partition. [R., 26 M. 104, 87 P.R. 1903.] In the above suit, it was contended that, in the circumstances of the case, the suit fell within art. 142 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, and that, therefore, the burden lay on the plaintiff of proving that possession remained with him till sometime within 12 years of the institution of the suit, and it was held that it must not be assumed that plaintiff has been dispossessed so as to render art. 142 applicable. There being no specific article relating to tenants-in-common, art. 144, which is appropriate to the case of a possession which was in the beginning lawful but has become adverse, must be applied. As between tenants-in-common mere non-participation in the profits by one tenant and exclusive occupation by the other is not sufficient to entitle the former to a decree for joint possession or consequently to make a case of adverse possession. The party claming to hold adversely must at least prove that it was in denial of the other's title that he excluded him from enjoyment of the property. There must be something amounting to ouster of the person against whom adverse possession is claimed, and, between tenants-in-common, there cannot be any such ouster or adverse possession until there has been a disclaimer by the ascertion of a hostile title and notice thereof to the owner, either direct or to be inferred from such open and notorious acts of exclusive ownership as might sufficiently warrant the inference that one of such tenants-in-common has been ousted by the other. The plaintiffs, brought the present suit claiming one-twelfth share in addition, on the ground that previous mutation proceedings where wrong. Held that s. 43, Civ. Pro. The Revenue Court in the partition case was "empowered" to effect a partition, and, if it chose, to decide any question of title that might arise. The Revenue Court being so "empowered," s. 158 (1) of the Land Revenue Act prevents any Civil Court from taking cognizance of the matter. INAYAT v. NAMANG, 8 P.R. 1910=6 P.W.R. 1910=5 Ind. Thereupon, the plaintiffs instituted a suit against the present defendants and S for possession of one-third of the property mortgaged, on the allegation that they were F's reversioners, and, in respect of the remaining two-thirds, for a declaration that the alienation would not affect their reversionary rights, and obtained a decree for the relief sought. Subsequently, they instituted the present suit against the two sisters alone for possession of the residue of F's land. It was pleaded that the present suit was barred by s. 43, Civ. Pro. The fact that a suit embracing the relief sought in the present suit and in the former suit might not have been bad for misjoinder did not necessarily entail that the present suit was barred by reason of the relief claimed not having been included in the former suit and that, although the respondent's right to possession of the share of F had accrued when the previous suit was instituted, the immediate cause of action was the execution of the mortgage, and the plaintiffs were entitled to sue separately for the relief claimed, which had no connection with the mortgage. Pro. Code, that the cause of action is clearly different, and the claim made is not part of the claim which the plaintiff was entitled to make "in respect of" the cause of action in the former suit. The cause of action for any portion of the rent is complete when that part of the rent is due and is unpaid; the cause of action for recovery of the property does not arise until the tenancy is determined—the one is founded on the obligation to pay for the occupation, the other on an obligation to withdraw from the occupation. A claim "in respect of" a cause of action is a claim "founded on" that cause of action. The difference between a claim "founded on" a cause of action and a claim "arising out of a cause of action," seems to be more a difference of metaphor than a difference in the quality of the claim. In 1905 the plaintiff and his vendors sued the owner of the remaining 1/16th share and the person to whom it was sold by that owner, for possession by partition of their 15/16th share in the jungles by separating the share of the last-mentioned owner. The suit was decreed in the plaintiff's favour on the 17th January, 1908. On the 15th October, 1908, he brought another suit against the same defendants to recover damages for converting into charcoal the trees that stood in his share. It appeared that the conversion complained of had occurred before the first suit was instituted and that the plaintiff knew of it. Held, that the second suit was barred by the provisions of s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code of 1882; for, if the plaintiff had contracted for and acquired the right to the standing timber on 15/16th share of the jungles and that had already been converted by the defendant to his use at the time of the first suit, the plaintiff was bound to claim compensation in the first suit in respect of that conversion, and he could not again sue for damages as if a fresh cause of action had arisen. A contract for the cutting of all kinds of trees to be converted into charcoal upon the ground, excepting such trees as produce fruit or other forest produce, is not a contract for the sale of an interest in land, but is an agreement relating to moveable property. Trees answering to the above description are standing timber within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and as such are not immoveable property. ALISAHEB BABA DIWAKAR v. R afterwards brought the present suit against certain mortgagees in possession, claiming under a mortgage executed by the same widow prior to the above-mentioned alienations, to set aside the mortgage of certain mauzas which formed part of the lands he sued for in the previous suit, on the ground that the widow had no power to charge the inheritance. Held that the present suit was not barred under s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859, as there was no splitting up of the same cause of action. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), O. 41, r. 23, power under.*—A plaintiff cannot be said to have omitted to sue under s. 43 of the Code of 1882, or to have intentionally relinquished his claim in respect of properties, the title to which was not brought to his notice at the time of the commencement of the previous suit. The causes of action in a suit for partition of joint properties and a suit for declaration of title on the ground that the defendants fraudulently took steps to recover debts, which, though they stood in the names of the defendants, belonged to the plaintiff and the defendants, are different. Where, in a suit for partition, the plaintiff stated that he ha discovered to the best of his ability what the joint properties were and called upon the defendants to mention if there were other properties jointly belonging to the members of the family, so that they might be brought into hotchpot and made the subject of the partition suit, and the defendants omitted deliberately to mention the properties which were in controversy in the subsequent suit: Held, that the decree in the partition suit did not affect the title of the plaintiff to the disputed properties in the subsequent suit or alter their character as joint properties, and the plaintiff had cause of action against the defendants for partition of those properties. The subsequent suit was not therefore barred under s. 43 of the Code of 1882. A suit claiming a share in the mortgage-decree with other properties was not one for recovery of immoveable property or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property within the meaning of s. 44 of the Code of 1882 (a). The powers of a Court of appeal under the Code of 1908 are much wider in respect of remand than the powers of a Court of appeal under the Code of 1882. GORA CHAND v. BASANTA, 15 C.L.J. 258=12 Ind. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred under para 2, s. 43 of the Code, inasmuch as the plaintiff had, in a previous suit, instituted against him by the present defendant, claimed a set-off in respect of a portion of the sum due to him upon adjustment of accounts under s. 11 of the Code, and had omitted to claim a set-off in respect of the remainder, which he sought to recover in the present action. Held, when the present plaintiff claimed, as defendant in the previous suit, a set-off under s. 111 of the Code, he was, so far as his claim to set-off was concerned, in the position of a plaintiff, within the meaning of s. 43 of the Code. Under s. 43, every suit should include the whole of a claim, which a plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of a cause of action. A person, who has a right of action against another for money payable on the account stated, is not entitled to sue first for one portion of the money payable on the stated account and then bring another action in respect of the balance, He is bound to include the whole amount in his claim founded on that cause of action in one suit. S 111 of the Code entitles the defendant to set-off against the plaintiff's demand an ascertained sum of money legally recoverable by him from the plaintiff, provided that the amount claimed to be set-off does not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. If the defendant's claim exceeds that which is made against him by the plaintiff, he will be entitled to a decree for the excess, it he proves the claim. A defendant is not bound to plead a set-off. He may, if he thinks proper, sue for the amount that is owing to him in a separate action ; but if he does rely on a set-off it is provded in s. 111 of the Code that the set-off shall have the same effect as a plaint in a cross-suit so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in the same suit both on the original and on the cross claim. Therefore, a defendant, who sets up a claim by way of set-off, cannot split it; and while enforcing a portion of it under s. 111, cannot bring a suit to enforce the remainder. Suit was barred by s. 43 of the Code. NOWBUT PATAK v. MOHESH NARAIN LALL, 1 C.L.J. 364=32 C. 654.

A decree may be impeached where there has been gross negligence by the next friend in the conduct of the infant's case, or new matter discovered since the date of a decree. Gross regligence on the part of a next friend, exhibited in a suit brought by him on behalf of minors, prevents the effect of the statutory bar contained in s. 103, Civ. Pro. objected to the attachment under s. 278, Civ. Pro. Code, on the ground that the property belonged to them and not to G. The objection was disallowed. On the 18th July, 1898, the plaintiffs instituted a suit against the defendants for a declaration that the property was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree. On the 2nd November, 1898, the Munsiff dismissed the suit on the ground that the property had been sold, that the plaintiff was, therefore, able to seek further relief than a mere declaration and that consequently the declaration sought could not be granted. In December, 1898, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit against the defendants in which they claimed Rs. 92-2-0, the value of the property, as a compensation for its illegal attachment. Held, that the cause of action on which the former suit was founded and the cause of action on which the present suit was founded were one and the same and not distinct; that such being the case, the plaintiffs were entitled in the former suit to make a claim for the value of the property as compensation for its illegal attachment; and that, having omitted to make such claim in the former suit, s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, debarred them from it in the present suit. The expression 'cause of action' as used in s. 43, Civ. Pro. Code, is generally understood to mean every material fact which, if denied, the plaintiff must prove to entitle him to succeed; and it does not include the relief claimed. Held, therefore, that whether the plaintiffs claimed a declaration that the property was not liable to sale and attachment, or whether they claimed the value of the property as compensation for its illegal attachment, the same material facts would have to be proved to enable the plaintiffs to succeed, and those facts were that the property was their property, and that it had been attached; and that, in either case, the fact that they had objected to the attachment and objection had been disallowed, was not a material fact without proof of which they could not succeed. (2680)—O. 2. r. 2 (3)—Omission to sue in the same suit for all the reliefs to which plaintiff is entitled—Subsequent suit for any omitted relief, barred.—A, bona fide purchaser of certain land from B, built a house on the same. C, a mortgagee of B, obtained a decree against B, and in execution of the same caused the land as well as the house built on it to be proclaimed for sale. A, brought a suit against C, for a declaration that the mortgage-decree in respect of the suit should be declared null and void. Subsequently, he brought another suit for a similar declaration with regard to the house built by him. Held, that it was certainly open to A, to ask in the alternative in the first suit that the mortgage-decree should be executed only in respect of the land and that the house built by him as transferee for a value without notice of the mortgage should be exempted from the sale: that his omission to sue for this relief in the former suit constituted a bar to the latter suit under O. (2681)—O. 2 r. 2 (3)—Declaratory suit for partition—Omission of relief—Separate suit—Limitation.—In a prior suit, the plaintiffs sought for a declaration that a certain will executed by their father was null and void inasmuch as he had no right to dispose of by will the ancestral joint property. One of the defences raised in that suit was that the suit was barred by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiffs, being out of possession, had failed to ask for possession. The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs, and the defendants were in joint possession, and hence overruled this plea of the defendants. The case went up to the Privy Council, but nowhere did the defendants challenge the finding of the Subordinate Judge. Later on, the plaintiffs brought this suit8for partition of the property: Held, that, under the circumstances, the second suit was not barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908;

Held, further, that the second suit was not barred by limitation, inasmuch as it had been brought within twelve years from the date of the Subordinate Judge's decision in the prior suit. KANHAYA LAL v. KUNWAL LAL BAHADUR, 7 Ind. Cas. 284.

The Munsiff decided wholly in favour of the plaintiffs but, on appeal, the District Judge held that the suit was not maintainable so far as it related to the fishery which was unconnected with the agricultural holdings and gave decrees for agricultural rents only. Held, since by contract the rents were consolidated, the tenants agreeing to pay sums so consolidated, the causes of action for both the rents were not different; but even assuming that the claims were based on different causes of action, plaintiffs were entitled to decree for the entire amount claimed, since the claims were such as could be joined together in one and the same suit in accordance with the provisions of s. 45 of the Code and the District Judge was, therefore, wrong in having held that the suits, so far as related to the rents of the fishery, were not maintainable. On the objection urged for the respondents that the claim for fishery rent was not entertainable in the Court of the Munsiff but only in a Court of Small Causes, held, that a suit for recovery of rent other than house rent, is not cognizable by Small Cause Courts and there is nothing in the definition of the word 'rent' in the Bengal Tenancy Act which excludes fishery rent. S 46 of the Code refers to s.45and when it speaks of several causes of action being united, which cannot be conveniently disposed of in one suit; it refers to several causes of action, which may be rightly united under the first paragraph of s. 45. There is no authority expressed in, or to be implied from, the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code, which would warrant the joinder in one suit of different and distinct causes of action under circumstances not mentioned in the first paragraph of s. 45 of the Code. Code relates, have the common characteristic that they owe their legal condition to the death of another. But there are others, of whom this can be predicated, as for instance, legatees or next-of-kin, and yet they are not named in rule (b). But the common characteristic of executors, administrators and heirs which is not shared by legatees and next-of-kin is that the former not only acquire title from the deceased but they may represent him. In this is to be found the clue to the meaning of the rule. Thus, a claim may be made by or against the heir of a deceased Hindu as his representative, and again the same person may claim for his own benefit and in his own personal right, property of which the beneficial ownership has devolved on him by inheritance from, that is to say, as heir to, this deceased Hindu. His legal capacity in the two cases is absolutely distinct, and it is only in reference to his representative capacity that it can be said a claim has been made by or against an heir as such. Where a plaintiff sued for recovery of possession of two adjacent plots of land and for declaration of his right of way over the road between them, and it appeared that the witnesses, who would prove acts of dispossession of the plots of land and the closing of the right of way, would be probably identical, and that nothing could be gained by compelling the plaintiff to bring two suits for the redress of what really appeared to be one wrong. Held, that the High Court would not a pleader on his behalf applies for adjournment, (the pleader having no other instructions but to get an adjournment) which is refused; then the party must be considered not to have "appeared" by counsel within the meaning of ch. VII. An appearance may be made by a pleader or recognized agent, but the concurrence of the pleader or agent is essential. As soon as he ceases to intend to represent the principal, the latter is unrepresented. So, where a pleader who applies for an adjournment is accompanied by a recognised agent of the party, but the agent neither makes any application, nor does any act, the question would be not merely whether he is present in Courts when the application for adjournment is made, but whether he intends to appear and in fact does appear for the party in the exercise of his powers under s. 36 of the Code. This section does not say that the presence of the recognised agent in Court is necessarily an appearance by the party, but it is purely enabling. The mere presence of the agent in Court would not be an "appearance" in the suit, if he although able to do so, does not think proper to conduct the case on his principal's behalf. SOONDERLAL v. Code, the appearance of the pleader of a party is equivalent to the appearance of the party himself. Therefore, when the respondent's advocate, in the absence of the respondent, appears at the hearing of the suit fixed for the taking of evidence, his appearance is an appearance which would prevent the proceedings from being ex parte. It is the duty of the defendant, who attended in person at the first hearing, to have given his pleader all necessary instructions and to have made all requisite preparation of the production of witnesses at the next hearing, and, if he fails to do what he ought to have done the other side should not be allowed to be prejudiced by his laches. The language of the Code is perfectly plain and simple and purposely adapted to the comprehension of simple minded Courts, and it would be wrong to give any encouragement to puzzle such Courts with conundrums of the sort, when is an appearance not an appearance? Ss. 100, 101 and 108 all come in ch. VII of the Code, headed "Of the appearance of the parties and consequence of the parties and consequence of non-appearance," and from the first (s. 96) it is obvious that the Chapter was meant primarily to deal with appearance at the first hearing and that the construction ordinarily to be put upon the words "ex parte" is the trial of a suit in which the defendant after being duly served

The purpose of s. 37 of the Civ. Pro. Code of 1882 is to provide for appearances being made and acts being done on behalf of suitors in Courts within the jurisdiction of which they are not, at the time, present. Therefore, a liberal construction should be put upon the term "non-resident" in that section. (6 B. 100, F.) The Zemindar of Ettiapuram gave a general power of attorney to a certain man, authorising him to institute suits on his behalf during his absence, and went to Delhi. The agent instituted the suit for arrears of rent which was returned for want of the power of attorney. V, r. 16 of the present Code) contemplates three distinct classes of service: (1) on the party in person; (2) on that party's duly appointed agent; and (3) upon any other person on behalf of that party. The law contemplates the third class of service, only when the party cannot himself be found. The Court has inherent powers to set aside ex-parte decrees of its own, upon any sufficient ground or when it appears that failure to do so would result in an abuse of its own processes; but it cannot exercise those powers so as to override the provisions of statutory limitations. The term "knowledge" used in art. 164 of the Limitation Act, 1908, means no more than knowledge of the fact that a decree of the kind is in existence: it does not embrace knowledge of the contents and general effect of the decree. defendant. In this respect the new Code has altered the law. The mere presentation of an appeal does not put it beyond the power of the original Court to deal in any manner with the judgment under appeal. But the position is different after the adjudication of the appeal, when the original judgment has been superseded by the judgment of the Court of Appeal. (37 I.A. 70, 32 A. 295, 6 Ind. Cas. 669, 14 C.W.N. 667, 7 A.L.J. 507, 11 C.L.J. 560, 12 Bom. L.R. 444, 8 M.L.T. 457, 20 M.L.J. 587, 13 C.W.N. 846, 3 Ind. Cas. 468, M.W.N. 1910, 392, Rel.) Therefore, an original Court can entertain an application to set aside an ex-parate decree presented by one of the defendants, when an appeal preferred by the contesting defendants from the decree made against them in the same suit, is pending. The term "knowledge" in art. 164 of sch. I of the Limitation Act, 1908, means certain and clear conception of a fact, the fact being the decree in the suit. The expression "knowledge of the decree" means knowledge not of a decree but of the particular decree which is sought to be set aside, (5 Ind. Cas 525, 12 C.L.J. 53, 27 M. 602, 14 M.L.J. 321, 30 M. 535, 17 M.L.J. 436, Not F.) 11 Bom. L.R. 1296, 4 Ind. S. 80 contemplates that the persons sought to be served should be residing at the house. Code, by a defendant against whom an ex-parte decree had been passed without personal service of the summons on him, the Court passed an order against him. He applied again under s. 108 of the Code, and it was held that though the unappealed order against him passed under s. 101 was no bar to the subsequent application under s. 108, yet he could not succeed on the merits, seeing that he had been properly served. The serving officer's return showed that, according to the information given to him, there was no prospect of his being able to serve the defendant personally with a reasonable time. Consequently, the service effected by him by affixing the summons to the door of the defendant's house amounted to a proper and sufficient service on him. SANKARALINGA MUDALI v. ex-parte decree—Irregularity in service of summons —When a serving officer finds a defendant to be away temporarily from home, and knows where he is, it is not good service of the summons under s. 80 of the Civ. Pro. Code, if he thereupon does no more than fix the summons to the outer door of the house, but he must make further efforts to effect personal service. In an application under s. 108, Civ. Pro. Code, to set aside an ex-parte decree on the ground that the applicant was not served with notice of the suit, and had in fact come to know of the existence of the decree only about two weeks or more after it was past, it was found that the process-server attended at the house of the defendant and learnt on inquiry that he was not present in the house but had gone to another town; and the process-server, thereupon, without any further attempt to serve the summons on the defendant personally, affixed the summons to the outer door of the house in which the applicant resided. Held that under the circumstances, there was no proper service of the summons, and the ex-parte decree was ordered to be set aside so far as the applicant was concerned. The circumstance that the process-server could not find the witness, though he says in his return that he knew where he was, is not sufficient per se to warrant the process-server in affixing a copy of the summons to the house of the witness, so as to constitute good substituted service under s. 80 of the Code. In cases where the witness was served as above, the penal powers of s. 174 of the Code should not be exercised. Where the witness has not been sufficiently served as above, the mere fact of his applying for time to appear would not preclude him from saying that there had been no such service of the summons as could warrant s. 174, Civ. Pro. Code, being put into force. Under s. 174, Civ. Pro. Code, the witness can only be fined when he has been arrested and brought before the Court after the arrest. KALI NARAIN ROY CHAUDHURI v. (2757)—O. 6, r. 14, O. 19, r. 1—Plaint—Signing and verification—Plaintiff company incorporated in foreign country—Signature and verification by person holding general power-of-attorney—"Principal officer."—There is nothing in r. 1, O. XIX, Civ. Pro. Code, to exclude from its operation a foreign company which is not incorporated as such in this country. (30 C. 103, F.) A plaint was filed in the Delhi Court on behalf of the Singer Manufacturing Company, which is incorporated in the United States of America and carries on an extensive business in respect of the sale of sewing machines in various parts of this country. The plaint was signed and verified on behalf of the company by one M who had been appointed agent for the company at Delhi by P who, in his turn, held a general power-of-attorney from the company's accredited English agents authorizing him to act for the company as their general attorney and agent in British India and to appoint sub-agents therein: Held, that the plaint was duly signed and verified on behalf of the company, M being the person having special knowledge of the facts relating to the claim and holding a general power-of-attorney for the Delhi District, by which he was duly authorised to sign the plaint on behalf of the absent company and that he was also the "principal officer" of the company within the meaning of O. XIX, r. 1, and competent, as such, to sign and verify the plaint. SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, DELHI v. YAR MUHAMMAD KHAN, 160 P.L.R. 1911.

(2758)—O 6, r. 17—Amendment of pleading—Defence of limitation—General observations about amendment of plaint.—The plaintiffs filed a suit for dissolution of an alleged partnership and accounts. It was found by the Court of first instance that they had advanced Rs. 4,001 to the defendants; but it dismissed the suit on the grounds that no partnership was created and that the suit as framed would not lie. The plaintiffs appealed, contending that the partnership had been created and the suit was in order. When the appeal came on for hearing, the plaintiffs prayed for leave to amend the plaint by adding a prayer for the recovery of Rs. 4,001. This amendment was allowed and the claim decreed. The defendants appealed on the ground that the amendment was wrongly allowed, especially as at its date the claim was time barred: Held, that the amendment was rightly allowed. The defence of limitation was, in the particular circumstances, a defence to which the defendants were never fairly entitled, and the allowance of the amendment only withdrew from them an advantage which they ought never to have received. Per Batchelor, J.—Under O. VI. r. 17, Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, it is clear that at any stage of the proceedings all amendments ought to be allowed which satisfy the two conditions (a) of not working injustice to the other side, and (b) of being necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. Amendments in plaints should be refused only where the other party cannot be placed in the same position as if the pleading had been originally correct, but the amendment would cause him an injury which could not be compensated in costs. It is merely a particular case of this general rule that, where a plaintiff seeks to amend by setting up a fresh claim in respect of a cause of action, which since the institution of the suit had become barred by limitation, the amendment must be refused: to allow it would be to cause the defendant an injury which could not be compensated in costs, by depriving him of a good defence to the claim. The ultimate test, therefore, remains the same. Can the amendment be allowed without injustice to the other side, or can it not? Per Beaman, J.—Amendments of pleadings will always be allowed, unless allowing the amendment will place the other party at a disadvantage for which he cannot be adequately compensated by costs. There are two simple tests to ascertain whether a given case is within the principle. First, could the party seeking to amend obtain the same quantity of relief without the amendment? If not, then it follows necessarily that the proposed amendment places the other party at a disadvantage, it allows his opponent to obtain more from him than he would have been able to obtain but for the amendment. Second, in those circumstances, can the party thus placed at a disadvantage be compensated for it by costs? If not, then the amendment ought not, unless the case is so peculiar as to be taken out of the scope of the rule to be allowed. KISANDAS RUPCHAND v. RACHAPPA VITHOBA SHILVANT, 11 Bom. The provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code, O. VI, r. 17, as to the Courts' power to amend the plaints are comprehensive. DRONAN RAJU RAMAYYA v. CHUNDARI RODDAYYA, 10 M.L.T. 116

On the defendants pleading title to the property, plaintiffs prayed for amendment of their claim by claiming possession and damages. Held, that a suit for a declaration cannot be regarded as inconsistent with one for possession (11 M. 295, 15 M. 15, F.) and that an alteration in the relief prayed for, would not alter the character of the suit, so as to prevent an amendment of a plaint in that respect. S 53, cl. (c), Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, distinctly provides that an amendment, so long as it does not alter the character of the suit, may be allowed at any time before judgment. The restriction is only as to the nature of the suit, the law prohibiting any such amendment as would change the fundamental character of the suit; for example, a plaint cannot be so amended as to convert a claim based on contract into an action on tort. good grounds are made out. (20 W.R. 240, 18 A. 131, F.) S. 578 of the Code may cure an error in the decision due to misjoinder of causes of action, unless such error has either affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. The terms of O. 70, r. 1 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, are narrower and more restricted in scope than those of s. 578 of the Code. Even in second appeal, if a suit is founded to be bad for misjoinder of caues of action, the proper procedure to follow would be not to dismiss the suit altogether, but to direct the Court below to perform the duty which that Court ought to have performed under s. 53 of the Code, namely, to return the plaint for amendment. The possession of a Receiver appointed by the Court during the pendency of a suit should be regarded as possession for the party, who might ultimately turn out to be the true owner and entitled to possession as such. The effect of such possession by the Receiver is to destroy the adverse possession, if any, of either of the parties. SARALA SUNDARI DASI v. An amendment of a plaint, which transforms radically the nature of the claim, cannot be made under s. 53, Civ. Pro. Code, and certainly not in appeal, s. 53 requires and permits amendment of the plaint before judgment, and not after. The large powers conferred on appeallate Courts by s. 582 do not authorize such a transformation of a suit in appeal. BAI SHRI MAJIRAJBA v. (b) of the Civ. Pro. Code, after it has been admitted and duly registered. A plaint was presented on the 23rd June, 1902, insufficiently stamped. The plaintiffs were directed by the Court to pay the deficit Court fees on or before the 5th July; the Court fees were supplied on the 9th July. No prayer was made for extension of time, nor was an order made in that behalf; but the plaint was directed to be admitted and registered. At the final hearing, the plaint was rejected upon objection taken by the defendant that the deficit Court fees had not been paid within the time allowed. Held, that, under the circumstances of this case, the plaint ought not to have been rejected, but the Court ought to have proceeded with the suit, as if it had been instituted on the date the deficit Court fees were actually paid, dismissing such portion of the claim, if any, as might, in this view, be barred by limitation. (11 A. 92, F.) Where a suit had proceeded even to the framing of issues, and it was found that the plaint was undervalued and understamped, the plaint should have been rejected under s. 54 (a) and not dismissed under s. 158, Civ. (2801)—O. 7, r. 11, O. 6, r. 18 (=s. 54, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Burma Land and Revenue Act, ss 15, 18, 19, 55 (b), 56—Dispute as to right to occupy or to possess land not covered by a grant or lease or in respect of which no declaration has been made—Land occupied under rules regulating its temporary occupation.—The jurisdiction of a Civil Court is not necessarily barred by s. 56, Burma Land and Revenue Act, in a dispute between persons as to the right to possess or occupy a part of a registered holding not covered by a grant or lease under s. 18 and in respect of which no declaration under s. 15 has been made, because there is no law requiring a landholder to obtain a declaration of his status under s. 15. But s. 56 of the Land and Revenue Act bars the jurisdiction of a Civil Court when the claimant admits, or when it otherwise appears, that he claims to occupy merely under s. 19, that is, under rules regulating the temporary occupation of land over which no person has a right of either of the cl. (a) and (c) of s. 6. The provisions of s. 56 of the Burma Land and Revenue Act, 1876, that inter alia, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in "claims to occupy or resort to lands under ss. 19, 20 and 21, and disputes as use or enjoyment of such lands between persons permitted to occupy or resort to the same" is a positive rule of law, which affords grounds for the rejection of a plaint. If a plaint does not contain particulars sufficient to make it appear on the face thereof that the Court has jurisdiction, this would be sufficient ground for returning such plaint for amendment under s. 53 of the Code. If, during the course of a suit, a Judge is satisfied on the evidence produced by the parties that the claim or dispute or part thereof is one covered by cl. (b) of s. 55 of the Land and Revenue Act, it would be his duty to dismiss the suit or such part thereof on the ground that the Court, over which he presided, had no jurisdiction to determine such claim or dispute. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), the appellate Court acted illegally and with irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and the High Court could interfere. (11 C. 6, 3 C.W N. 581, R.) The policy underlying ss. 62 and 63 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), is to exclude evidence, as to the existence of which at the date of the suit there may be reasonable doubt, and as to the genuineness of which suspicion might rightly arise because it was produced at a late stage. (8 B. 377, 12 C. W.N. 312, 8 C.L.J. 147, R.) The appellate Court in the above circumstances should have considered whether leave for the reception of the document was properly granted, and whether the trial was prejudiced thereby, and whether, by reason of the delay in the production of the document, there was a well-founded ground of suspicion that this document was not genuine. The appellate Court dealt with the case on the footing that, besides the excluded document, there was no other evidence to support the plaintiff's case, when, as a matter of fact, there was other evidence on the record. Held, that there was no proper trial and it was incumbent on the High Court to interfere. A Munsif is not competent to restore a case so dismissed to his file. If he does so his act is ultra vires. The Munsif's proceeding, setting aside his first decision, cannot be said to be in the nature of a review of judgment. The Munsif's order under s. 155 of the Code is a decree, and the proper course for the plaintiff in such a case is to appeal against that decree and not to apply for the restoration of the case to the file. In all such cases, if the parties or either of them shall not appear in person or by a pleader, s. 147 authorizes the Court to proceed in the manner pointed out in ss. 110, 111 or 114 as the case may be; but the language of s. 147 does not raise any question about the meaning of the words "a party to whom time may have been granted;" for it speaks of adjournments generally; and s. 146, though it clearly authorizes the Court to grant time and adjourn the hearing of the suit upon application by the parties or either of them, is not limited to such applications but gives to the Court independently of any application, a general power to adjourn the hearing of the suit from time to time. Ss. 110, 111 and 114 of the Code have reference only to the first hearing of the suit which may be either on the day named in the summons or a subsequent day to which the first hearing may have been adjourned. filed—Counsel stating no instructions—Ex parte decree—Costs.—In a certain suit, the defendant had appeared and put in a written statement, and the hearing was thereupon adjourned. But when the suit was called on for final disposal, the defendant's Counsel applied for an adjournment on the ground that a telegram had been received on the previous day stating that the defendant, who had gone to fetch his witnesses had been taken ill on the way back, and was consequently unable to be present at the hearing. The application for adjournment was refused. The defendant's Counsel then being asked whether he appeared, said that he did not and that he had received no instructions in the case. The suit was heard and a decree was given for the plaintiff. The defendant afterwards applied for setting aside the decree on the ground that he had been prevented by sickness from being present when the case was called on. Held that the defendant had brought himself within the provisions of s. 119 of Act VIII of 1859 and that he was entitled to have the judgment set aside, and that the time for appearance was not the occasion on which the adjournment took place but when the case came on for final disposal. Plaintiff satisfied the decree under protest and then sued the decree-holder for recovery of the amount paid and for damages for wrongful attachment. The Court held that, as the payment was voluntary, the claim to recover it was not maintainable, but that the suit might proceed on the question of damages. Plaintiff prayed for the drawing up of a formal decree with regard to the portion of the claim which was dismissed, and also to withdraw the rest of the claim with liberty to bring a fresh suit under s. 373, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. Both prayers having been refused, plaintiff unconditionally withdrew the claim for damages. The defendant thereafter proceeded to give evidence on all the issues raised in the case, the plaintiff not appearing. In the result, the Court, purporting to act under s. 102, Civ. Pro. Code, dismissed the suit for default. The plaintiff appealed to the Chief Court which held that, the suit having been dismissed under s. 102, Civ. Pro. Code, no appeal lay. On further appeal to the Judicial Committee, held, that the case was not one to be dealt with under s. 102, Civ. Pro. Code, inasmuch as the claim for recovery of the money paid to discharge the attachment had been fully determined adversely to the plaintiff by the Court's previous order, and the rest of the claim had been abandoned, leaving nothing to be tried. Held further that the case should go back to the Chief Court to decide the appeal on the merits. The plaintiff's success upon such application depends on his ability to prove that he was prevented by any efficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. The defendant may, for the purpose of showing that no such cause existed, prove that, in fact, the plaintiff had appeared, and that he was not prevented by any sufficient reason from appearing at the hearing; but that is a question to be determined for the purpose of considering whether the plaintiff has been able to substantiate his application under s. 103, Civ. On the adjourned date, the plaintiff, a pardahnashin lady, naturally was not present, and her pleader was engaged in another Court, when the case was called on, and her claim was dismissed on the ground that she, the plaintiff, did not appear. An application was made to the Munsiff to set aside the order of dismissal. The application was refused by the Munsiff because he considered that the dismissal of the suit was under s. 155, Civ. Pro. Code, and that the plaintiff's remedy was by way of an application for review of the decree, and not by an application to set the order of dismissal aside. On appeal the District Judge set aside the Munsiff's order and directed the Munsiff to restore the application to his file and dispose of it on the merits. The defendants applied to the High Court under s. 622, Civ. Pro. Code, for revision against the order of the District Judge. Held that the suit was and must be treated as having been dismissed under s. 102 or s. 157, Civ. Pro. Code, and that in both cases an appeal from the order of the Munsiff refusing to set aside the dismissal lay to the District Judge and that therefore the District Judge had on appeal power to send the case back, that the application had further no merits, and that therefore the High Court would not interfere with the order of the District Judge. They were apparently dissatisfied with certain orders passed by the lower Court in the course of the trial of the case, and on the 3rd January, 1901, they filed an application in which they said that they declined to argue the case and virtually announced that they did not intend to appear again. The next and the last date on which the case came on was the 28th January 1901. On that date, neither the appellants nor their pleaders appeared. The respondent was present. The lower Court recorded the following order: "It is now 1-4 p. m., plaintiffs being absent, I have nothing for it but to dismiss the suit in default. Plaintiffs' claim is dismiss in default with costs." No section was specified in that order. Held that the order of the Court must be held to have been made under s. 157 read with s. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that it was not a decree, not being an adjudication upon any right claimed, and was not appealable. The Court then examined the plaintiff's pleader who stated that he was appointed to present the application and that he was not in any way acquainted with the facts of the case. Held, that, where, at any adjourned hearing of the suit, there is no appearance by the plaintiff and there are no materials on record, the appropriate procedure is that laid down by s. 157, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. (Per Crouch, A.J.C.) An appearance at an application for adjournment which is refused is not an appearance at the hearing of the suit. (34 C. 235, 1 S.L.R. 224, 34 C. 403 F.B., R.) An "appearance" is nothing more than physical attendance in the Court. If, therefore, when the hearing commences, the plaintiff or his duly appointed pleader is actually present in Court, there is an appearance of the plaintiff at the hearing. If it be desired that there should be no appearance, the result can, in reality, be attained only by the plaintiff and his pleader walking out of the Court when the case is called on for hearing. But it is considered sufficient for the pleader to do something or say something implying a request that the Court should regard him as absent, and for the Court to do something or say something to intimate that the request has been granted, or at any rate, not been refused. The usual formula used by pleaders. "I am not instructed" or "I have no instructions" is perfectly well understood by most Judges; and where no dissent is expressed, the general opinion seems to be that the pleader is fairly justified in assuming that he is being treated as not present. (23 B. 414, 22 A. 66, 30 M. 374, R.) Held, that, on the facts of the present case, the presumption that the order of dismissal was under s. 157, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, holds good. The authority of a Barrister or Advocate to represent a party is based on the fact that he has "received instructions" from an Attorney or Solicitor. Instructions are not merely the information as to facts, but constitute his authority to represent the client. If, therefore, he states in Court that he has no instructions, that concludes the question of his representation. But a pleader's authority is based on the fact that a 'vakalatnama' has been filed. And his authority can be terminated only on a written application by the client and with the consent of the Court. FAKIR MAHOMED v. VIRAN, WIFE OF KOJI, 3 S.L R. 208=6 Ind. Cas. 851.

The plaintiff failed to attend Court on the date fixed in the case and the Court dismissed the suit. Held, that the action of the Court was harsh; when a case is under arbitration, a Court should not hastily dismiss the suit for non-appearance in Court of the plaintiff. Much less should this be done when the arbitrator has made an application for extension of time for filing award. Held also, that, when an arbitrator asks for extension of time and there is no reason to suspect that, being in collusion with either party, he is wilfully delaying matters or that in any other way there is bad faith in his conduct, the Court should always grant reasonable extension. (2898)—O. 9, r. 9. (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 103)—Suit for redemption by purchaser of mortgaged land against mortgagee—Subsequent suit for possession by purchaser against vendor and mortgagee—Causes of action different.—In 1881, plaintiff, a purchaser of certain mortgaged property, brought a suit for redemption against the mortgagee, and this was dismissed for default under s. 102 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The plaintiff, however, had arranged with his vendor that the latter would pay off the mortgage. He subsequently brought this suit against both the vendor and the mortgagee for possession of the land. The defendant pleaded that the present suit was barred by s. 103, Civ. Pro. Code. Held that s. 103 of the Code should receive a somewhat strict construction, that the first was against the mortgagee alone for redemption based on plaintiff's purchase of the equity of redemption ; that his present case was that he contracted for the purchase of the property from the vendor, who undertook to clear it of the mortgage and that the mortgagee had since purchased the equity of redemption from the vendor with full knowledge of the said contract with the plaintiff ; and that, therefore, s. 103 of the Code was no bar to the present suit. (2901)—*O. 9, r. 9 (=s. 103, Civ. Pro. Counsel's appearance in Court on instructions only to apply for an adjournment, is no appearance for the purposes of the conduct of the suit. GURDIT SINGH v. But if probate has been refused, not on the merits, but merely by reason of the insufficiency of some matter of form or procedure, there is no adjudication that the instrument is not entitled to probate, and therefore, it may be again propounded. If, therefore, an application for probate by the executor of a Will has been dismissed for default, that fact itself cannot debar an application by any other person claiming an interest under the will, and therefore, necessarily also, by the executor himself. An executor presenting an application for probate of a Will cannot be regarded as a plaintiff who brings a suit in respect of a cause of action. S. 103 of the Civ. Pro. A previous suit had been brought by some other members of the tarwad to question the validity of another lease executed by the same karnavathi. and it had been dismissed for default. The plaintiff in the present suit was the 7th defendant in that suit. Held that the suit was not barred by s. 103, Civ. Pro. S. 103 cannot apply to a case, unless the plaintiffs in the prior suit are also plaintiffs in the subsequent suit, or unless the plaintiff in the latter suit can be regarded as having been also a plaintiff in the former. Held that, inasmuch as the present plaintiff was not only a defendant, but a contesting defendant in the previous suit, the present plaintiff cannot be held to have been represented by the plaintiffs in the prior suit. A suit for declaration that an alienation by the karnavan of tarwad property is not binding on the tarwad is governed by art. 120. A generous construction should be placed on the enactment, which gives the power to restore. The general policy of the Legislature, in a matter of this sort, is shown by the fact that a right of appeal is given against an order refusing to restore, but no right of appeal is given against an order of restoration. There are different considerations which bear upon the matter, the question always being whether, in what the guardian did, he acted in the best interest of his ward. Finally a decree was given against all the defendants, it being ex parte against those who had not appeared. On the latter's application the ex-parte decree was set aside, and, on re-hearing the suit, the Court restricted itself to the case of the defendants at whose instance the ex-parte decree had been set aside. Ultimately a decree was passed against all the defendants, and, within three years of the last decree, the decree-holder applied for an order absolute. The defendants, against whom the first decree had been passed after contest, contended that the application was barred, as more than three years had elapsed from the date of the original decree against them: Held, that the original decree, being one, and indivisible, was set aside in its entirety, and that the decree-holder's application, therefore, was within time: Held further that the word "decree" in s. 108, Civ. Pro. Code, meant the whole decree made in the suit and that a decree could not be set aside in part. SAMODH DHAR DUBE v. When a decree, passed ex parte against several defendants, is set aside and the case revived at the instance of one of them, under s. 108, the order does not necessarily revive the whole suit to the benefit of the other defendants, whose prayer under the section has been heard and rejected. (2961)—O. 9, r. 13 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 108)—Judgment ex-parte—Service of summons on defendant—Substituted service—Residence out of jurisdiction.—The Civil Justice Regulation requires that the service of summons on a defendant, shall, when practicable, be on the defendant in person ; if he cannot be found, it may be made on an adult male member of his family residing with him ; and when he cannot be found and there is no such person, service may be effected by posting the copy on the outer door of the house in which the defendant is dwelling, if he is dwelling at any place within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court. In s. 33 of the Regulation, the word "dwelling" is not used, but the word "resided," showing that a distinction was made between the case of a person permanently living in a place and a casual resident. The inference seems to be that, before the Court issues substituted summons, it should cause a summons to be served in one of the ways mentioned above on a permanent dweller within the jurisdiction and, when the defendant is out of the jurisdiction, service should be effected in the place where he dwells according to the rules there applicable. And this is only reasonable as the defendant, who is not trying to evade process, is entitled to have notice at his permanent dwelling-place, where he can make arrangements to meet the case that may be brought against him. This being so, s. 44 of the Regulation provides that, when a defendant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that the summons was not duly served, the Court shall pass an order setting aside the judgment ex parte. In this case, the defendant died after decree. The section applicable after decree is s. 234 of the Code, which does not authorise any application to be made by the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor to bring them on the record, but only authorises the plaintiffs to make such an application. This application was granted. Thereupon, the decree-holder made an application under s. 108 of the Code to have the order set aside. The Court rejected this application, refusing also to treat it as an application for review under s. 623 of the Code. Against this order, the decree holder appealed, under s. 588 (b) of the Code, as from an order under s. 108, and also took a plea to the effect, that the Court below ought to have treated his applications as one under s. 623 and to have disposed of it as such. The lower appellate Court held that there was no valid ground for interfering with the order on the application under s. 108, but went on to direct that the application should be restored to the file of the Court below and disposed of as an application for review of judgment. Held, on appeal from this order by the judgement debtor, that an appeal lay to the High Court. But if not, the Court was justified in treating the memorandum of appeal as an application in revision, inasmuch as the order of the Court below was passed without jurisdiction. NANDA v. The plaintiff asked for an order for the appointment of the first defendant as the guardian ad litem of the minor's, and the Court thereupon, issued two notices to the first defendant, one to appear and defend the suit brought against him, and the other calling upon him to appear and state whether he was willing to act as guardian ad litem for the minors. No appearance was made by or on behalf of the defendants on the day fixed for hearing of the suit, and the Court taking up the case passed an ex-parte decree against all the three defendants. In execution of the decree, applications were made on behalf of the minor defendants under s. 108, Civ. Pro. Code, to set aside the ex-parte decree. Held by the Full Bench that the decree should be set aside as against the minors, as there was no formal or informal appointment of a guardian ad litem for them in the suit as prescribed by s. 443, Civ. Pro. Code, the mere notice to the first defendant proposing to appoint him as such guardian being quite insufficient. (14 C. 204, 6 C.L.R. 69, R. / D., 10 O.C. 321; R., 5 C.L.J. 434.] Held also that because the decree in the case mentioned in this case was one and indivisible, it could not be set aside against the minors alone, but as a whole. (25 C. 155, 5 C.W.N. 58, 18 B. 142, Not F.). No such grounds exist in the case of s. 108, Civ. Pro. Code. The direction given in the section, viz., that the Court shall set aside the decree, cannot be taken to mean that the decree shall be set aside only as against party who may apply for it and show sufficient cause. Again, at the end of the section, the Court is directed, after passing an order setting aside the decree, to appoint a day for proceeding with the suit. This is an indication that it was the entire decree which was in the contemplation of the Legislature, and not the decree so far as it affected one or more only of the defendants, for the direction is to proceed with the suit, not to proceed with the suit as against the defendant who had succeeded in having the decree set aside. Therefore, where an order is made under s. 108 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the decree set aside is primarily the whole decree and the suit to be proceeded with is the whole suit. It is necessarily so when the decree is one and indivisible. But it may be that, where a decree passed against several defendants consists in reality of separate decrees against each, the decree can be set aside in part. Per Aikman, J. —The words "the decree" in s. 108, Civ. Pro. Code, refer back to the opening words of the section, and denote the decree passed ex-parte against the defendant who makes out a case for having it set aside. The direction 'to proceed with the suit,' means, except under exceptional circumstances, to proceed with the suit against the defendant who has succeeded in getting the ex-parte decree set aside. (8 W. R. 260, 15 W R. 371, 4 C.W.N. 456, R., 1 W. R. 222, 7 W.R. 237, 8 Bom. L.R. 142, 25 C. 155, Cons.) Therefore, s. 108 of the Civ. Pro. Code, primarily applies so far only as concerns the particular defendant who seeks to get an ex-parte decree against him set aside. But, there may, however, be exceptional circumstances, where it may be necessary in the interests of justice that the whole decree should be re-opened. Thus, where the decree is one and indivisible, it must be set aside as a whole or not at all, although the application to set aside the decree may be the application of one only of the defendants. N.B.—An exhaustive review of the Indian case-law on the construction of the section will be found in this judgment. X of the Code. There was no direct evidence as to the exact date on which the interrogatories were served on the defendant. On behalf of the defendant, an application was made for extension of time till the 30th. However, on the 24th November, the Court passed an order under s. 127. The question for determination was whether or not an order to have the defence of the defendant struck out was proper and valid. Held, no order can be passed under s. 127 until there has been an omission or refusal to answer interrogatories. There was certainly no refusal, for the defendant only asked for time, and on the 24th, there had been no omission, for the ten days allowed by law had not expired. Further, when the documents, inspection of which is denied, are letters written by the party seeking inspection, a very strong case should be made out for refusing inspection. BALAMONI v. Civ. Pro. Code (Acts V of 1908, XIV of 1882, X of 1877, XXIII of 1861 and VIII of 1859)—continued.

The order for the production of documents is to be limited to such documents alone as relate to matters in question in the suit, and the Court must, consequently, before it makes the order, determine for the purpose thereof what are the matters in question in the suit. A party cannot obtain a commission for the inspection or production of books or papers, in order that he may ransack them for evidence to make out his case ; he is entitled to production or inspection only when the same is material and necessary to establish his cause of action. When the Court is satisfied that an order for production of documents should be made, the time and place of inspection should be specified, and it should also give directions as to the manner of inspection. A Court should not delegate to the Commissioner the exercise of the power, which the Court possesses under r. 14, to require the production of any document. When a particular document has been produced before the Commissioner and marked by him in the manner directed by the Court, it will be open to the plaintiffs to inspect it, and if they are advised that the production of any particular document in Court is necessary in the interests of justice, they must make an appropriate application to the Court, and the question will then be dealt with by the Court in the presence of both parties under O. 11, r. 14. A right to inspection ordinarily includes the right to have copies of the document. The plaintiffs will be at liberty not merely to inspect the documents but also to make note of their contents. If they find it necessary to obtain copy of a document, they must apply to the Court for directions. If the High Court is satisfied that an interlocutory order, such as an order for the production of documents, has been made without jurisdiction, or under such circumstances as are likely to cause irreparable injury to one of the litigants, it has power to set matters right, under s. 15 of Statute 24 and 25 Vic., Chapter 101. (3050)—O. II, r. 15 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 131)—"Any other party"—Co-defendants.—The words "any other party" in s. 131, Civ. Pro. Code, does not refer only to the defendant as contrasted with the plaintiff, or vice versa, but to any two parties, whether plaintiff or defendants, co-plaintiffs or co-defendants, between whom it is necessary to adjust rights. There is no objection to one defendant seeking discovery of inspection as against a co-defendant, provided that such co-defendant can be regarded as an opposite party. V, the father of the plaintiff, died in 1887, leaving the plaintiff a minor. The third defendant obtained letters of administration to V's estate during the minority of the plaintiff. Shortly after the plaintiff attained his majority, he and the third defendant executed a mortgage of V's estate to defendants 1 and 2, the consideration for which was alleged to be certain debts due by V on promissory notes, advances made to the third defendant for the purposes of the administration, and a sum paid in cash on the execution of mortgage-deed. The plaintiff now brought the suit to have the mortgage set aside and an account taken of what was really due in respect of the alleged consideration, alleging fraud and misrepresentation and undue influence on the part of the third defendant as to the debts of V, and denying that the amount which ought to have been paid in cash was so paid. Held that the first two defendants were entitled to inspection of certain account books and documents as against the third defendant under s. 131, Civ. Pro. Code, that it was very possible that first defendant not having been able to set aside the mortgage as regards himself, the third defendant was colluding with the plantiff to enable him to save what he could from the fire, and that under such circumstances he should be considered as a "party opposite" to the first two defendants, although eventually the Court might not be able to make any order between him and them. The defendants applied for an order on plaintiffs directing the production in Court of the latter's books of account for inspection, upon a general suggestion, in no way specific, that, probably, entries might be found therein inconsistent with the plaintiffs' case. The plaintiffs showed cause to the contrary, alleging that there were several difficulties in the matter of transmission of the books to Agra, and alleging, also, that their current business would suffer, if the books of one whole year should be taken to Agra. The Court, however, passed an order directing the production of the accounts. plaint—Discretion of Court in excluding—Certified copies of public documents or record of judicial proceedings — Erroneous exclusion—Second appeal.—When a plaintiff seeks to produce documents at the trial which he had failed to mention in the list annexed to the plaint, the Court has clearly a discretion under s. 139 of the Civ. lady was the widow of the last male proprietor of the share from which the right of pre-emption arose. The younger lady was the widow of the son of the last male proprietor. On the day appointed for framing the issues, the issues were framed and recorded under s. 146, Civ. Pro. Code. The hearing was not further proceeded with on that day. Owing to some change in the officers of the Court, the hearing of the case was proceeded with by another Judge. An application was then made to allow the proceedings to be amended by striking out the claim of the younger widow. That application was refused, and the action was dismissed on the ground that the two widows could not be entitled to claim for pre-emption Held, on appeal, that if one of the widows was entitled to claim for pre-emption, the other could not have been, that consequently a stranger had been joined as co-plaintiff, that the application to strike out the name of the younger widow was not made till after the first hearing, that it was then consequently too late to apply to the new Judge, when he took up the suit to proceed with it under Chapter XV, Civ. The Judge should not have noticed the strange remedy demanded by the plaintiffs, and have ascertained whether the defendant admitted its correctness. The District Judge, in appeal, had power, under s. 542, Code of Civil Procedure, to hear the appellant in support of a new ground of objection, even though it had not been, as it was, set forth in the memorandum as a ground of appeal, and, considering that this was a matter of law going to the root of the case and not inconsistent with the defendant's line of defence, there is no doubt that the Lower Appellate Court should have considered it. There are several cases in which, even in special appeal, the High Courts have held it to be right to permit new points to be argued. (3 C. 612, R.) MAUNG SAING v. Neither defendant appeared and the Court passed a decree ex parte against both the defendants. The decree proceeded on the footing that the debt was incurred for a family purpose. The nephew alone applied under s. 108 of Civ. Pro. Code, that the decree passed ex parte might be set aside. Held, that the decree could not be set aside in toto against both the defendants. There was no contention as to the making of the note and the consideration therefor. (13 C.P.L.R. 152, 9 B. 308, R.) But the Court has inherent power under s. 15, to prevent abuse of its process, and refuse to issue summonses, where it is convinced that a vexatious desire to obstruct the course of justice is the governing motive of the party applying for summonses. Though to have summons issed, if applied for before the hearing, is an absolute right of a party, that right does not extend to his being entitled to an adjournment, if, for any reason which is an ordinary incident of the proceedings for service of process, the summons fails of its object. When the Court gives reasonable time for securing effective service and its advantage is lost owing to anything being left undone which could and should have been done, the party guilty of such laches cannot ask that the trial be prolonged in order to escape from the consequences of his own laches. In a joint family governed by the Mitaksbara law, a grandson can maintain a suit for partition of ancestral family property, even when his father and grandfather are both alieve, if they allow it to be wasted and the grandson's interest is imperilled. The Judge observed that, as the vendee was the leading man in the District, he should not be compelled to appear in Court and that his evidence would be unnecessary and, after examining one of the vendors and hearing the arguments, recorded an order that the case was closed and that the judgment would be delivered on a certain day. Subsequently the Judge wrote his judgment a week before the date fixed for its delivery and dated it on the day on which it was written. Held, that the omission to summon the vendee was a substantial error in procedure. Under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff had the absolute right of summoning any witness he named to give evidence in the Court, and the Judge had no power to fetter the plaintiff's discretion, and was, therefore, bound to take coercive measures against the vendee and to give every assistance to the plaintiff for securing the attendance of his witness. Held, also, that the Judge was bound to wait until the date fixed and not to announce judgment at an earlier date, and that, in neglecting to take this course, his action was in flagrant violation of the provisions of law, and that, therefore, the judgment was a nullity. Where the refusal of an application to procure the attendance of witnesses has been taken as a ground of appeal from the decree in the suit, s. 578 of the Code would apply, if the irregularity in refusing the application did not affect the merits of the case. respect of the mouza and claimed to set off in this suit the plaintiff's quota of such revenue against the arrears of rent due from him to the plaintiff. Held that the obligation of the plaintiff, if there was any, to re-pay the defendant her quota of the Government revenue, not being a debt resting upon a contract between herself and him, or even upon a quasi contract, but being an obligation to be ascertained and determined by the application of the principles of equity to circumstances surrounding the defendant, her co-sharers and the plaintiff, which were exceedingly complicated, the Court could not try a question of this kind by way of set off to the plaintiff's claim under the provisions of s. 121, Civ. Pro. Code, 1859. If the claim which the plaintiff in equity brings against the defendant is so connected with the counter-claim which the defendant sets up against the plaintiff that the one cannot be properly and sufficiently inquired into and ascertained without consideration of the other, then a Court of equity will allow a set-off, which the defendant in this way makes. To admit a set-off, therefore, there must be, by the nature of the two claims, such a connection between them that the truth or completeness of the one cannot be judged of or measured without reference to, and a consideration of the other. defendant of proving plaintiff's adoption—Adoptive father, though cited as witness, abandoned, by both sides—Defendant applying for examination of adoptive father after both sides had closed case—Application properly to be refused—Laxity in conduct of litigation—Best evidence—Evidence Act, ss. 11 and 43.—One Ramkrangir, when he was joint with his younger brother K and acted as karta of the joint family, conveyed, on 12th October, 1903, to one Puri a portion of the joint property. In January, 1905, K sued to obtain possession of half the aforesaid share, claiming that the sale was void for want of consideration, and, in any case, could not bind him, as it was neither necessary nor beneficial to his interests. The defendant, inter alia, alleged that the plaintiff was adopted soon after October 1898 by one S, thereby losing all title to the property of his natural family. The defendant had the burden of proving that the plaintiff had been adopted by S. The general rule that the best evidence should be given required him to put the adoptive father into the box. But he deliberately closed his case without tendering S, though both sides had included S in their lists of witnesses. After the case was closed and was posted for judgment, the defendant applied for leave to examine S, who was present in Court. The first Court refused to examine S. Held that s. 181, Civ. Pro. Code, had no application under the circumstances, that there was no reason whatever why the first Court should have exercised the power conferred on it by s. 165, Civ. Pro. Code, and that it was not bound to examine S, but exercised the discretion allowed in such matters, not only legally, but wisely. To countenance a manœuvre of this sort would only lead to laxity in the conduct of litigation. If a party wants a certain person examined, he must tender him for examination, and s. 181, Civ. Pro. Code, does not require a Court to examine a witness, simply because he may be present in Court. (6 W.R. 231, 13 W R. 185, F.) It was objected, also, that the pleadings did not include an allegation that S, being a nihang, could not adopt, and that the first Court should not have relied on orders recorded in a suit not inter partes, showing that J, whom the defendant's witnesses described as having taken a prominent part in the adoption ceremony in 1900 or later, was already dead in April 1899; held that the fact that J died early in 1899 was relevant under s. 11 of the Indian Evidence Act, and, if he was treated as dead, in a civil suit to which he was a party, the Court's order was good evidence of a fact which might be proved otherwise (See s. 43 in the Indian Evidence Act). Code, 1882)—Time given to plaintiff to produce evidence—Default in appearance on adjourned date—Statement by plaintiff's vakil that he had no instructions—Nature of order to be passed—What section to be applied—Scope of ss. 157, 158*—Plaintiff obtained time from Court to produce his evidence on a certain date. On that day he did not appear and his vakil stated that he had no instructions. The Munsiff, instead of dealing with the case under s. 157 of Act XIV of 1882, disposed of it under s. 158 on the issues raised. Held, that there was clearly a default in appearance on the adjourned date and that the Munsiff was wrong in disposing of the suit under s. 158, Civ. Pro. Code, as he should have disposed of it under s. 157. Ss. 157 and 158, of Act XIV of 1882, should, if possible, be read as mutually exclusive. S. 157 deals with cases of failure to appear, and s. 158 with cases of failure to do the thing for which time has been granted; neither can be treated as an exception to the other, for there may be failure to do the thing for which time has been granted, the parties themselves being present, and there may be failure to appear even when no time is granted to do anything in particular. When a case is set down for hearing, whether it is on the original or the adjourned date, the first question for the Court is, are the parties in attendance? If both or either of the parties have or has failed to appear, the Court is bound to deal with the matter under Ch. VII, or s. 157 read with Ch. VII, as the case may be. Any other defect in the case or default of any party is a matter for investigation and orders, only after the question of default in appearance has been settled. The appearance of the parties or more correctly the determination of the consequences of non-appearance has a natural precedence over the disposal of matters arising in the trial of the case. Therefore, if there be default in appearance on the adjourned date of hearing, s. 157 should alone be applied, no matter whether there has or has not been default of the kind referred to in s. 158. It is only in case the parties are in attendance and there is a failure to do what a party is given time to do, that s. 158 is to be put in requisition. CHANDRAMATHI AMMAL v. C. S. Code*, 1882)—Mere default of party to attend Court in person—Court not to pass decree against him under s. 158 but to proceed under s. 175.—S. 158 of the Code is applicable only to cases where any party to a suit, to whom time has been granted, fails to do certain specified acts for which time has been allowed. (80 P.R.1889, R.) It contemplates cases where the parties, have expressly obtained time to produce evidence and does not refer to adjournments by the Court, in the ordinary course, of its own motion. (139 P.R. 1884, R.) So where a defendant required to attend Court in person failed to be present on the date of the hearing, the only course open to the Court was held to be to proceed under s. 157. In the absence of anything to show that the defendant had expressly asked for time and then made a default, the Court could not pass an order to decide the case forthwith under s. 158 of the Code. (3164)—O. 17, r. 3 (=Civ. Pro Code, 1882, s. 158)—Suit dismissed for default—Plaintiff misled by previous action of the Court—Discretion of the Court.—Two cases involving similar issues were ordered by an officiating District Judge to be tried together, one of the cases being transferred from the file of the Subordinate Judge to that of the District Judge for that purpose. The District Judge's successor in office dissociated the two cases, and ultimately fixed the 6th February for the hearing of one of them, and the 8th April for the hearing of the other, apparently in ignorance of the order passed by his predecessor. On the 30th January, the plaintiff in the case, which was fixed for the 6th February, applied for the summoning of witnesses and for a postponement of the hearing. The District Judge granted the application for summonses but refused to postpone the hearing of the case. In consequence of this action, the attendance of the necessary witnesses could not be procured in time, and, on the 6th February, the District Judge, purporting to act under s. 158 of the Civ. Pro. Code, dismissed the plaintiff's suit for default. The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court. Held that, even if the order of the District Judge under s. 158 of the Civ. Pro. Code, could be considered, on a proper construction of that section, as a legal order, still the plaintiff might reasonably be taken to have been misled by the action of the Court, and, under the circumstances, the Court had not exercised a sound discretion in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The Court executing the decree ordered the decree-holder to pay certain fees for issue of notice to the opposite side for the purpose of an inquiry as to whether the property sought to be sold was or was not ancestral property and directed that the case should be brought up again on a date named in the order. On that date, the Court passed an order striking off the application for sale on the main, and practically the sole, ground that the talabana required had not been paid, but at the same time specifically maintaining the attachment. Held that such an order could not be taken to have an effect similar to that of an order in a suit under s. 158 of the Civ. Both parties to the suit were represented on that day by their pleaders. The Court of the first instance subsequently entertained and rejected an application under s. 119 for a re-hearing. An application to restore the appeal was made after the expiry of 30 days prescribed by the Limitation Act for such applications. Notice was issued to the defendants to show cause against the granting of the applications, and the Divisional Judge after issue of the notice was succeeded by another Judge, who re-heard the appeal and upheld the order of the original Court. The plaintiff applied for revision. Held, that the order passed under s. 158 of the Code was illegal and the case must be tried on the merits. (23 H. 462, R.) It was contended that, the application to re-hear the appeal having been made after the expiry of 30 days and the period not being extendible, the order of dismissal became final. Held, that, treating the application as one for review, there was no irregularity in the proceedings of the lower appellate Court. The two hearings of the case cannot thus be linked together and virtually made one. The succeeding Judge should take up the case at the point which it had reached before the commencement of the hearing under Ch. XV of the Civ. Pro Code. He should fix a day for the entire hearing of the suit before himself. He should hear the plaintiff's opening statement of his case, allow both sides to produce their evidence (and this, under s. 191 of the Civ. Pro. Code, can be done by allowing the evidence taken by his predecessor to be put in); and after hearing the arguments on both sides, he should finally decide the case which he had thus himself heard and tried. If the succeeding Judge does not adopt this course, but continues the case from the point at which it was left off by his predecessor, and decides the case upon materials which were never before him, he acts illegally, and his judgment and decree would be nullities. In execution, the decree-holder realized the amount specified in the decree. More than three years later, the decree was amended at the instance of the judgment-debtor. Thereupon, the judgment-debtor applied to the Court below for a refund of the amount, which had been realized from him in excess of the sum payable under the decree as amended. Held, that the application by the judgment-debtor was not an application for execution, but one, under s. 244, Civ. Such an application is not governed by art. 179 but by art. 178 of the Limitation Act, time beginning to run from the date the decree was amended. Before that date, no application for a refund of the amount could be made, as such application would have been inconsistent with the terms of the decree as it then stood. HARNAM CHANDAR v. The plaintiff did not pay the money to the defendants but elected to pay the money into Court. And as the Court was closed from the 10th to 13th April, 1909, the payment was made into Court on the 14th April, 1909. The lower Courts held that, as the money had by the terms of the decree to be paid to the defendants, the plaintiff had no option to pay it into Court; and that, therefore, the payment into Court was not in compliance with the terms of the decree: Held that r. 1 of O. XXI of the Code provided that all money payable under a decree should be paid into Court or out of Court to the decree-holder. (3235)—O. 21, r. 1 (=s. 257, *Civ. Pro. Since such transfer, the parties agreed that the decree-amount should be paid by instalments, and applied to the Sub-Court to record satisfaction of the decree and the Sub-Court did record accordingly. The judgment-debtor paid some instalments out of Court and then committed default. The decree-holder, thereupon applied to the District Court, that passed the decree, to execute the decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor in respect of the instalments in arrears. This petition was dismissed. The decree-holder, then, applied for execution of the original decree itself and applied for stay of proceedings till the disposal of this appeal which was one against the order of dismissal of the application for the execution of the decree, so far as it concerned the instalments due under the agreement come to between the parties since the original transfer of the decree to the Sub-Judge. The question for decision, under the circumstances, was whether the original decree was executable in its original condition or as modified by the agreement above alluded to or whether the decree was so completely extinguished as to be incapable of execution and so as to necessitate a fresh suit on the agreement, by reason of the agreement taking the place of the original decree and by reason of satisfaction being recorded by the Sub-Judge. Held, the agreement and the record of satisfaction thereof did not render the original decree unenforcible in execution; the effect of the record of satisfaction merely amounted to striking the execution-proceedings off the register of pending cases. C then entered into a compromise upon certain terms with K for the adjustment of the decree, and K thereupon, but without certifying the terms of such adjustment to the Court, petitioned for the release of C, who was accordingly released. Subsequently K again applied to the Court to compel satisfaction of the whole amount of the decree against C. This application was opposed by C on the ground that an adjustment of the decree had taken place between him and K. The Judge however, refused to enter into the question of the adjustment, as the terms of it had not been certified to the Court, under s. 206 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held, that the Judge was in error that it was the duty of K, on applying for the release of C, to certify the adjustment to the Court that it would be unjust to allow him to take advantage of his own omission to do so; and that, not having done so, the presumption against him was that the decree had been satisfied in full; but that, under the circumstances, it would be the most equitable course to direct the Judge to inquire into the terms of the adjustment. (3265)—O. 21, r. 2 (=s. 258, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Decree—Execution—Adjustment of decree outside the Court—Adjustment not certified to the Court—Decree holder acting under adjustment and receiving money under it for several years—Estoppel by conduct—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Fraudulent execution of decree—Criminal law.—In execution of a decree, an adjustment of it outside the Court was pleaded. The adjustment not having been certified to the Court under s. 258 of the Code of 1882, it was contended that the Court could not recognise it as valid. The Court overruled the contention, holding that, as the decree-holder had acted upon the adjustment and received moneys under it, he was estopped by conduct under s. 115, Evidence Act, 1872. On appeal: Held, the view of the lower Court give the go-bye to the plain language of the last paragraph of s. 258 of the Code. S. 258 says that a Court, which is asked to execute a decree for money, shall not recognise for the purposes of execution any adjustment of it, whole or partial, or any payment, made outside the Court and not certified to it as required in the preceding part of the section. When the law directs that such an adjustment or payment "shall not be recognised" for the purposes of execution, it means that the adjustment or payment, as the case may be, should be treated as an invalid or void transaction, so far as the executing Court is concerned. There is no room left by the law for the operation of the law of estoppel in the matter of execution. The last paragraph of s. 258 of the Code, enacts a special law for a special purpose, whereas s. 115, Evidence Act, relates to the general law of estoppel; and the principle is that a special law overrides for its purposes the general law. Per Chandavarkar, J.—Fraudulent executions of decrees must be discouraged by the Courts whenever they come to their notice; and decree-holders, who enter freely into adjustments outside the Court and do not certify them as required by law, but fraudulently apply for execution, ignoring the adjustment, should dealt with under the criminal law. Heaton, J.—The purpose of s. 258 of the Code, is that the Court shall have complete knowledge of all that is done towards the satisfaction of its decree. When an application for execution is presented, the Court enquires from its own records what has been previously done towards satisfaction. What it does not find on its own records it does not recognise, in this sense, that it, at the outset, assumes that what is not recorded as paid or adjusted, still remains unpaid or unadjusted. But it is still open to the judgment-debtor to assert and prove that what the decree-holder claims under the decree is not due, having been paid or adjusted; and it is still incumbent on the Court to go into the matter, if a contest on the point is raised. To state the result briefly, the final clause of s. 258 raises a presumption, but does not limit the jurisdiction of the Court. TRIMBACK RAMKRISHNA RANADE v. HARI LAXMAN RANADE, 12 Bom. payment made out of Court. He may, therefore, get such a payment certified at any time and no particular form has been prescribed by the Code for such a certificate. The section provides only that a payment not certified shall not be recognized by the Court as a payment or adjustment of the decree. So, where a judgment-debtor, denying his having made the payments certified by the plaintiff, pleads that the execution of the decree has become barred by time, it is quite open to the Court on such plea of limitation by the judgment-debtor to take evidence about the payments mentioned by the decree-holder in his darkhast for determining whether his application for execution has been barred by time or not. Pro. Code, which, presumably, must be taken to have been to discourage private arrangements out of Court, as tending to embarass the execution of decree unless subsequently recorded in Court, only by holding that, upon the proper construction of the said section, no Court can recognise an uncertified adjustment as operating in satisfaction of a decree for any juridical purpose whatever. On the above construction of the section, a suit will not lie to enforce an uncertified agreement of adjustment, against the judgment-debtor, the consideration for which is that it should operate in satisfaction of the decree, as there is, in such a case, no consideration which the Court can recognise, and therefore no valid consideration for the judgment-debtor's agreement. In the present case, the consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the promised sum by monthly instalments, was clearly that it should operate in satisfaction of the decree, the mortgage to the plaintiff having been intended as a security for the performance of that promise; and, therefore, as the adjustment had not been certified, the Division Court was held to have been right in refusing the plaintiff's claim for arrears of instalments, and their realisation, in default of payment, by sale of the mortgaged property. Pro. Code have no application to a Criminal Court investigating a charge under s. 210, I.P.C. It is not the intention of the Legislature, by enacting s. 258, Civ. Pro. Code, to bar any criminal remedy which an injured judgment-debtor may have against a fraudulent decree-holder, whether by a prosecution under ss. 193, 210, 406, or any other section of the Penal Code. A decree-holder is bound by s. 235, Civ. Pro. Code, to make a declaration, in his verified application for execution of the decree, as to any adjustment made after the decree, that is, any matter not done through the Court, as well as any agreement through the Court. Intentional omission to state in the application any such adjustment is an offence punishable under s. 193, I.P.C., and not under s. 199, I.P.C. [Appl., 11 B. 599 ; R., 11 B. 6.] A statement is within the meaning of s. 193, whether made "verbally" or "otherwise." It is doubtful whether s. 199, I.P.C., applies to an execution application containing false averments, inasmuch as s. 193, already provides for such averment. Nor is there, apparently any express provision of law which binds or authorises the Court to receive a verified application as "evidence of any fact" although, for the purposes of ss. 191, 193, a false averment in such application is regarded as false evidence. In construing s. 210, I.P.C., it is necessary to attach to the word "satisfied" its ordinary meaning, and not to understand it as referring only to decrees the satisfaction of which has been certified. A wilful attempt, by means of false statements, to use the process of the Court to recover money twice over, is punishable under s. 210, read with s. 511, and under s. 193. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. (3298)—O. 21, r. 2—Limitation—Execution decree—Agreement to enlarge period of limitation—Agreement to alter decree—Relinquishment of attachment—Proceeding in execution—A decree was passed in favour of K on the 17th September, 1853. It was kept alive and on the 30th December, 1864, an application was made for its execution. On the 6th February, 1865, the decree-holders and judgment-debtors came to an agreement, whereby the sum covered by the decree was to be paid by instalments, and filed a kistbandi to that effect; thereupon the Munsiff decided that the properties attached should be released, and on the 22nd February, 1865, struck the case off the file. The first instalment under the kistbandi became due on the 14th July, 1865. The decree-holder, on the 14th July, 1868, applied to recover the first six instalments which had fallen due. Held (Mitter, J., dissenting) that the execution of the decree was barred by time. Although the decree-holder may have bound himself not to issue execution before the 14th July, 1865, that circumstance did not give him three years from that date to apply for fresh execution, but he ought to have applied within three years from the 30th of December, 1864. The fact of his binding himself by kistbandi not to issue execution within a certain time does not affect the question of limitation any more than a voluntary abstaining from issuing execution would have done. A Court of execution has no power to alter a decree of the Court which passed it and the parties cannot alter the law or a decree of Court even by consent. A man may bind himself not to execute a decree of a Court, or not to execute it within a certain period, but he cannot, by binding himself not to execute the decree for a certain period, add to the time which the law allows him to execute. So, if a man binds himself not to execute a decree within a certain period, he must take care if he wish to execute the decree at all, not to bind himself not to execute the decree for a longer period than that within which the law would allow him to execute it. Notice was accordingly sent to the judgment-creditor who, however, denied having received any money. Held that the mere denial of the decree-holder that payment has been made is not sufficient cause to refuse certification of payment. XXI, r. 2, and cannot be recognised as it was not certified or recorded as such. There is no reason why the meaning of the word 'adjustment' should be limited so as to refer only to an adjustment which purports to be one and not to one which has the effect of an adjustment. Held, also, per Abdur Rahim, J., that if it cannot be pleaded as an adjustment, it cannot be relied on as showing want of title on the part of A. Per Sundara Aiyar, J. contra. Held that s. 258 (= O. XXI, r. 2) is no bar to proof of a contract that the assignee should obtain a transfer for the benefit of the judgment-debtor himself. O. XXI, r. 2, Civ. Pro. Code, does not prevent a party from proving that the assignment of a decree was not intended for the benefit of the assignee himself. The object of the clause is to provide that everything preventing the execution of a decree should be made a record of the Court, so as to give the Court complete control over its decree and execution thereof, and it is not part of its object to restrain the transfer of decrees by the decree-holder to any one he chooses. It does not make payments or adjustments which are not recorded or certified to the Court invalid, and the Court will give effect to such adjustments in proceedings other than the execution of the decree. It merely forbids effect being given to adjustments when they are set up as a defence to the execution of the decree by one entitled to do so. PONNUSAMI NADAR v. An application had been made in June, 1882 and granted. The Civ. Pro. Code of 1882 was applicable and the present application in 1885, having been made more than twelve years after the date of the decree, was such as to be barred by s. 230 of the Code unless saved by its concluding clause. Following the view of the Calcutta High Court in 12 C. 599, the words "law in force immediately before the passing of the Code" were construed as including the "whole law on the subject" and not as confined to art. 179 of the Limitation Act, and it was held that, as a prior application had been made and granted in 1881, i.e., under the Code of 1877, and twelve years would have elapsed before June, 1885, the present dharkast of 1885 was not saved from limitation by the concluding clause of s. 230 of the Code of 1882. The "decree for the payment of money" referred to in s. 210 of the Code has often been held to be what is ordinarily known as a money-decree in contra-distinction to a decree directing the sale of specific property, and the same construction must be given to the same words when found in different parts of a Code or Act. (3365)—O. 21, rr. 10, 21, s. 48 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s 230)—Fraud.—In order to bring a case within the proviso to s. 230, Civ. Pro. Code, two things have to be proved :—(1) that the judgment-debtor used stratagems designed to prevent the execution of the decree, and (2) that the execution of the decree was by such means prevented. It is obviously not enough to prove fraud at some time during the 12 years' period, because it is quite consistent with such fraud that the decree-holder may, at a latter period, have had full facility for executing his decree. It must be proved that the non-execution of the decree was brought about by the fraud complained of. Assuming that on application made before the expiration of the 12 years' period may, notwithstanding the provision contained in s. 230, Civ. Pro. Code, be granted after the lapse of 12 years from the date of the decree, there is no reason for holding that a decree-holder can, on account of the pending of a prior application for warrant of arrest, be allowed, after the lapse of the 12 years, to make another application for the attachment of immoveable property. When the decree-holder again applied for execution, it was more than twelve years from the date of the decree. Held that the action of the judgment-debtor in locking up his house and keeping it locked until the warrant of attachment had been returned unexecuted, was a contrivance, stratagem or "fraud," within the meaning of s. 230, Civ. Pro Code. It was not necessary that the judgment-debtor's fraud should have continued to prevent the execution of the decree right up to the date of the last application for execution. Fraud or force gives a new starting point for the twelve years' limitation. The proviso was intended to prevent the twelve years' rule of limitation being an inducement to judgment-debtors to evade execution by fraud or force with a view to obtaining

On the presentation of the next subsequent application on the 7th March, 1893, the judgment-debtors objected that it was barred by the twelve years' rule of limitation under s. 230 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Although the previous applications had failed, for some reason or other, to realise any money, some of them were 'granted' within the meaning of s. 230 of the Code, inasmuch as property had been attached under those applications in compliance with the prayers contained in them. It was, therefore, held that whether the last application was one in continuance of the next previous application, or a fresh application by itself, it was not competent to the Court to grant the same by reason of s. 230. The section does not prescribe that, no subsequent application shall be received after the expiration of 12 years; it forbids any application being granted. It is not competent to a Court to strike off an execution case whilst maintaining an attachment which has been made in that case. Such an order is a contradiction in terms and is not warranted by law. If there is no pending execution before the Court, there can be no subsisting attachment; and if there is reason for maintaining and attachment there can be no reason for striking off the application in execution which led to its being made. The application was granted in July 1884, and the decree and the certificate under s. 224 of the Code were given to the applicant, who filed the same in the Court of the District Judge in November 1885, and the Judge, under the authority of s. 226, Civ. Pro Code, directed the decree to be forwarded for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The applicant then filed the application asking the Subordinate Judge to execute the decree. This last application was made in November 1885. Held that the last execution application was not barred by limitation though it was dated more than twelve years from the date of the decree, inasmuch as it was not a fresh application for execution, but only one asking the Court to give effect to that of March 1884 which was still pending, and as it was nothing more than asking the Courts to give directions in accordance with the order of March 1884. If any other person brings to sale the hypothecated property in satisfaction of the debt due by the defendants, the plaintiff shall have power to take out execution of the decree without waiting for the instalments, and to cause the hypothecated property to be sold by auction." The decree was passed on 5th March 1884. On 5th December, 1896, an application for execution was made, which proved infructuous and was struck off on 1st April, 1897. A subsequent application was made on 30th November, 1899, and was resisted on the ground that execution of the decree was barred by limitation, regard being had to s. 230, Civ. Pro. limitation—Warrant of arrest issued but not executed, deemed to be subsisting.—An application for execution of a decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor was granted, but on the report of the peons entrusted with the warrant that the judgment-debtor had concealed himself, the Court struck off the application. A subsequent application made again for the arrest of the judgment debtor was also struck off, and on an appeal from the order striking off such application the difficulty was suggested that the decree could not be executed as it was impossible by reason of s. 230 of the Civ. The mere fact that a warrant was issued and came back unexecuted could not be taken to establish that the proceeding for execution in pursuance of which it issued was exhausted and thereby determined. —On the 1st June, 1880, the decree-holders in this and nine other cases applied to the Court of the Second-class Subordinate Judge of Parner, for execution of their decrees. They had taken out of execution several times previously, the date of their last preceding applications being the 1st of June, 1877. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the present applications were barred under the last clause of s. 230, Civ. Pro. Code, 1877. He, however, referred the cases to the High Court under s. 617 of the Code. Held that the applications were not barred, because the previous applications for execution had not been made under s. 230 of the Code, that Code having come into force only on the 1st of October 1877. The Executing Court disallowed the objection of the judgment-debtor that the application was barred under art. 179, cl. 4 of the Limitation Act and ordered execution. Held, that the lower Court's order was passed on a misapprehension of the meaning of s. 230 of the Code and of its bearing on art. 179 of the Limitation Act, as clearly explained in U.B.R. (1897-1901), 11, 477, that, if the order was to be interpreted as meaning that s. 230 fixes a period of 12 years' limitation, it would be directly opposed to the ruling in that case; that, in ordering execution on an application put in more than three years from the last application in contravention of the plain provisions of art. 179, the lower Court acted illegally within the meaning of s. 622 of the Code and that the order, therefore, should be set aside on revision. The attached decree directed the sale of the property mortgaged, and, in case of deficiency, the property of the judgment-debtor other than that mortgaged was to be proceeded against. Since the attachment, the judgment-debtor under the attached decree pleaded that the decree had been satisfied under an uncertified adjustment. The point thus arising for decision was, whether the provisions of s. 258 of the Code were applicable to decrees based on mortgage. Held, by the Full Bench, that every decree, by virtue of which money is payable, is, to that extent, a decree for money and that s. 258 must be held to be applicable to decrees where not only is the mortgage property directed to be sold but also the judgment-debtor is made personally liable for the balance. (24 M. 412, Overruled). The section is also applicable to cases where there is no direction to pay personally at all but only an order for sale (11 C. 718, Appr.) ; for, in either case, payment of money would be a complete satisfaction of the real purpose of the decree. The words 'decree for money' and 'a decree for the payment of money,' in ss. 230 and 295 of the Code, include a decree based on a mortgage for the sale of the mortgaged property. (20 M. 107, Appr.) A receipt, by a usufructuary mortgagee, of the profits of the land he is in possession of is, no doubt, a payment to the mortgagee, within the meaning of s. 22 of the Limitation Act. (11 C.L.J. 69, Rel. on.) S. 230 provides for an application for execution and s. 235 specifies the form and contents of that application. S. 490, which gives validity and effect to the attachment before judgment even after decree for certain purposes, does not give rise to the implication that that attachment was made on a constructive application for execution of a decree that had not been passed. (31 M. 502, Not F.; 12 B. 400, 33 C. 639, R.) The section does not make the application to execute the decree a second application to execute it, because it says re-attachment is unnecessary. representative—applying to be brought on record before preferring appeal.—The twelve years' period of limitation prescribed for the execution of a decree by s. 230 of the Code expired when the Court was closed. On behalf of the decree-holder, an unverified petition was presented for the execution of the decree on the first day on which the Court opened. The petitioner did not produce with his petition any evidence to show that he held a power of attorney entitling him to apply and did not produce his power of attorney. The Court returned the petition under s. 245 of the Code for amendment. The petitioner made the amendments required and represented the petition within the time allowed but after the lapse of the twelve years' period of limitation. Held that the Court ought to have rejected the application and not to have made an order allowing it to be amended. Held also that the petition as presented in the first instance could not save the operation of the statute of limitation. Where a party to an appeal died after the hearing of the appeal and before delivery of judgment, the judgment so delivered was not invalid by reason of the fact that the legal representative of the deceased was not brought on record before the delivery of the judgment. It is competent to such representative to prefer a second appeal from the decree passed by the appellate Court though he was not brought on record by that Court. It is not necessary for him to apply to that Court under s. 222 of the Code for being brought on record before filing the second appeal. If however, s. 237 does apply, it is a mere defect of description, and that defect can be remedied under s. 245. Where, the application is afterwards amended by giving the particulars required by s. 237, on an application made at a later period, the two applications become an entire application, dating from the date the first application was presented. application—Revival of old application—Construction—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sch. I, art. 182 (5).—On the 19th January, 1905, an execution-creditor filed an application under s. 235, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, for attachment and sale of certain immoveable property in execution of a mortgage-decree dated 16th January, 1903. Attachment and sale were ordered and execution was transferred to the Deputy Commissioner, who returned the papers pointing out that the application for execution referred to unsurveyed land, whereas the land which the execution-creditor required to be sold was surveyed. On the 14th January, 1907, the execution-creditor appeared in Court and stated that the application might be struck off and he would apply a second time with proper extracts of survey numbers owned by the judgment-debtor. The Court ordered the file to be struck off and allowed the creditor his costs. The judgment-creditor then filed the present application on the 12th April, 1908. Held, that the application was time-barred under art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. The order of the 14th January, 1907, was an order disposing of the application. The execution had been suspended by an act of the judgment-creditor, by his deliberate withdrawal. Therefore, on the 12th April, 1908, there was no execution pending under the first application; the attachment had been removed and all potentiality for active operation that the application had ever possessed had not only been suspended but terminated by the order of 14th January, 1907. The application of 1905 did not comply with the provisions of ss. 237, 238, Civ. Pro. Code. Consquently, the application of 1908 could not be considered as an application to restore or revive the old application. (27 A. 334, 1 C.L.J. 381, 15 M.L.J. 258, 9 C.W.N. 601, 2 A.L.J. 397, 7 Bom. If he cannot, he ought not to be added as an appellant. Where a person is named as the guardian ad litem in an application for execution, and notice under s. 248 of the Civ. Pro. When the manager under the Court of Wards has not taken possession of a certain property, the Court is not in charge of such property and cannot deal with it; and in a litigation with respect to such property, the manager of the Court of Wards need not necessarily be made the guardian or next friend of the ward. The decree-holder then applied under s. 273, Civ. Pro. second part of s. 231, Civ. Pro. Code, are imperative. S. 231, Civ. Pro. Code permits one of the several joint decree-holders to apply for the execution of the decree for the benefit of them all. It does not permit one of several joint decree-holders to apply for execution for the benefit of himself alone, as was done in this case. On receipt of such an application, the duty of the Court is to consider whether there is sufficient cause for allowing execution. Ordinarily, all the holders of a joint decree should join in the application for execution. Civ. Pro. Code (Acts V of 1908, XIV of 1882, X of 1877, XXIII of 1861 and VIII of 1859)—continued.

Subsequently P applied to execute the decree against S. The Court rejected the application for execution upon the ground that it was a decree for money against P and S "jointly as well as severally." Held, that there was nothing in the decree which saddled P and S with any personal liability to pay money, either jointly or severally : that question was expressly reserved by the decree for determination in the course of execution proceedings : that the amount of Rs. 22,748 and costs which was recoverable under the decree was made payable not by P and S personally but out of the property of the deceased A and L ; that no doubt by reason of the direction in the decree that the question of the personal liability of P and S should be determined in execution proceedings, there might subsequently be, when that liability had been determined, a decree for money against them ; but till then it was a mere contingency, which could not make the decree as it existed a decree for money against P and S ; that, therefore, s. 232 of the Civ. Prc. Code presented no bar to the decree of P being executed against the property of L in the hands of S. The expression "a decree for money against several persons" in s. 232 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 232—Decree holder—Transfer of decree by act of parties—Assignment in writing of the decree—The assignment can be produced at a late stage of execution proceeding by the transferee.*—While D and V, two brothers, lived together, a decree was obtained in the name of D, who made applications to execute the decree. The last of these was on the 18th April, 1905. The two brothers then separated. V, who became entitled to the decree on the partition but who had no assignment in writing of the decree from D, applied to execute the decree on the 3rd June and again on the 27th July, 1908. It was contended that V was not entitled to apply in execution, and that the applications were not steps-in-aid of execution. The Court granted time to V within which he was asked to produce an assignment in writing from D. Held, that the technical defect which existed in the application of the 3rd June, 1908 was cured by the subsequent production of the assignment in writing and that, therefore, the application, dated the 27th July, 1908, was in order. One of the creditors assigned his interest to the other, and under s. 208 of Civ. Pro. Code the Court ordered execution in favour of the assignee solely. The assignor petitioned the Court and got an order cancelling the assignment and recognising him as one of the decree-holders. The interest of the decree-holder, so far as it related to the land alone, having been purchased by the plaintiff in execution of a decree in another suit against the decree-holder, the plaintiff applied, under s. 232, to be recognized as transferee. That application was rejected, probably on the ground that he did not purchase all the interest of the decree-holder, he having purchased the interest so far as it concerned the land and not that which related to the mesne profits and costs. He brought the present suit for possession of the land, thus seeking to enforce the interest he purchased under the Court-sale. The defence was, that the suit was unsustainable, the matter being alleged to be one for adjudication under s. 244. Held, that, if the application of the plaintiff under s. 232 could not be granted on the ground that he had acquired only a partial interest in the subject-matter of the decree, he was entitled to enforce his right by a separate suit and the present suit was maintainable. be served on the judgment-debtor, provides also that notice shall be served on the "transferor." There is no express provision that the service may be made on the representative of the one any more than of the other. Still, it cannot be supposed that the Legislature intended the transferee's rights under a decree to be annulled by the death of the transferor, and the consequent impossibility of serving him with notice, and it is similarly most unlikely that the death of the judgment debtor was meant to prevent all execution of a transferred decree though not of one untransferred. In allowing the rights under a decree to be transferred, the Legislature must be supposed to have contemplated the transfer to be effectual, and to put the transferee (subject to a precaution against fraud) in the same position for getting execution as the judgment-creditor. Under s. 284 of the Civ. Pro. Code, a representative of a judgment-debtor, deceased, who has failed purposely or negligently to recover some debt due to the estate of the deceased, or some property belonging to it, is not liable in the same way as for "property of the deceased which has come to his hands." It has nowhere been provided that in an execution proceeding the representative shall be made answerable as well for what with diligence on his part would have come to his hands, as for what actually has come to his hands. It may well be, that while the Legislature intended to bring the representative under the control of a summary inquiry where he had actually received property, it did not intend to make him, answerable in other cases, except through the medium of a suit for administration or other regular action. XXI, r. 16 of the Code of 1908, for notices to the transferor and the judgment-debtor, on the 18th June, 1910. He applied at the same time for attachment by seizure of the goods of the judgment-debtor in his shop. On the same day notices were issued by the Court and also a warrant of attachment. Before any objection had been heard on the part of the judgment-debtor, the property was attached in his shop by seizure on the 20th June 1910. The objections were heard on the 26th June, and on the 6th August, 1910 the Court held that the assignee was entitled to execution of the decree against the judgment-debtor. The lower Court held that the procedure adopted was a mere irregularity and the proceedings in attachment should not be set aside. Held, that the procedure adopted was unlawful and not merely irregular, inasmuch as the objections of the judgment-debtor had not been heard before the attachment, which was a step in the execution proceedings, had been ordered. Some time after, B obtained a decree for Rs. 534 in the Munsif's Court against the plaintiffs. Shortly after this, the plaintiffs applied to the said Subordinate Court for an attachment of B's decree in the Munsif's Court. In the meanwhile, B assigned her decree to the defendant R. And it was not till two days after this assignment had been completed that B was served with notice of the plaintiff's application for attachment or the attachment itself was effected. R then applied to the Munsif for execution of his decree and in spite of the attachment of that decree effected by the plaintiffs and their attempt to get their decree set off against B's decree, the Munsiff ordered the execution of B's decree against the plaintiffs to its full extent. Thereupon, the plaintiffs brought this suit against the defendant R for a declaration of their right to have their decree set-off against B's decree. Held, (a) that the suit did not lie, because (i) the question whether the plaintiffs were entitled to have the benefit of a set-off of their decree against B was a question relating to the execution of the decree. (ii) It was a question which within the meaning of s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, arose between the parties to the suit although R became a party to the suit as assignee of B and for the purpose of executing the decree. Held, also, (b) that when R applied to the Munsif under s. 208, Act VIII of 1859, the Munsif ought to have given notice of that application to the plaintiffs and he ought to have refrained from granting R's application and have left him to his remedy against the assignor. Even if he did think it right and proper to allow R to stand in the shoes of B for executing the decree, he ought even then to have given reasonable effect to the application on the plaintiffs to have the benefit of their decree in the shape of a set-off, by staying proceedings for a time sufficient to enable the plaintiffs to get a transfer of their decree from the Sub-Court to his own Court. As the judgment was adverse to the decree-holder his son preferred an appeal to the High Court and there applied to be brought on the record in the place of his deceased father. Held that, the judgment of the lower appellate Court was to be read as from the date when the Court reserved judgment. Consequently, the decree-holder's son was not in competent to prefer the appeal by reason of the fact that he had not been brought on the record before the judgment of the lower appellate Court was delivered. Held also that it was not incumbent on him to have applied for execution to the Court which passed the decree. He adopted the proper procedure in applying to the High Court to be brought on the record, and an order having been made by the High Court bringing him on the record, he was competent to present the appeal. To discharge the debt, the first defendant, on 28th January, 1904, transferred to the plaintiff, by an assignment in writing, two decrees which he had obtained in his favour in the Court of the District Munsif of V. On 22nd April, 1904, these two decrees were attached before judgment by the Subordinate Judge's Court of K, in a suit brought by a third party against the first defendant. The plaintiff applied in 1905 for execution of the decrees to the District Munsiff of V. The application was dismissed on the ground that the decrees had already been attached by the Sub-Court of K. Plaintiff thereupon repudiated the assignment and brought a suit to recover the original debt. Held, that the suit was not maintainable, because the District Munsiff dismissed the plaintiff's application, for execution, not on any ground affecting the validity of the decrees, but simply because he had no power at the time to allow execution. The District Munsiff was bound, in the circumstances of the case, under the second paragraph of s. 272, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, to stay execution until the attachment was cancelled. Under s. 487, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, it was open to the plaintiff to present a claim to the attaching Court to withdraw the attachment, and if he had done so, it would have been the duty of the attaching Court to withdraw the attachment, in which case it would have been open to the plaintiff to apply again under s. 232, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, for execution of the decrees. By the assignment of the decree in writing, the property in the decrees passed to the plaintiff, so that they were no longer liable to be attached as the property of the first defendant. On appeal the Sub-Judge allowed, at a time when the decree had become barred, the execution petition to be amended by inserting a prayer for attachment. Held, that the Subordinate Judge was not right in allowing the amendment to the prejudice of the judgment-debtor, so as to preclude him from pleading limitation. Each obtained possession of the property in the proportion decreed. But B appealed against both the decrees to the Privy Council. Pending the appeals, A applied for an account of the mesne profits due to him, but the application was struck off as he did not comply with a condition requiring him to give security in case B should succeed in the appeals. B also applied for execution, and the Court found that $\frac{1}{3}$ of the mesne profits came up to Rs. 18,100, but on A's objection stayed execution till the disposal of the appeals to the Privy Council. The appeals were only dismissed, and now A applied for execution against B for $\frac{2}{3}$ of the mesne profits. B wanted to set off his item of Rs. 18,100. The Court held that the question of the amount due to A should be determined, and if this amount exceeded the Rs. 18,100 declared previously to be due to B, satisfaction of A's claim to that extent should be entered up and the balance recoved from B; and that this course, though not strictly in accordance with the letter, was in accordance with the spirit of ss. 246, 247 of the Code, and, under any circumstances, should be sanctioned on principle of natural equity. Held also that, until the amount of mesne profits due to A had been definitely ascertained by the executing Court, B's right to maintain his set-off did not arise; that the set-off was, therefore, not barred by limitation; that, when the executing Court finds the amount o

Code, effect of—Opportunity to contest validity of order—Estoppel.*—Mere service of notice upon a judgment-debtor under s. 248. Civ. Pro Code of 1882, is not by itself sufficient to debar him from urging the objection that an application is barred by limitation, when no order for execution has been made after the service of notice. (10 W.R. 8, F.B. 8 C L.J. 193, 14 C.W.N. 114, 3 Ind. Cas. 47, Rel. on.) Again, if an order for execution has been made without notice to the judgment-debtor, it is not sufficient to debar him from urging the objection of limitation. (5 Ind. Cas. 59, 11 C.L.J. 357, 14 C.W.N. 433, 7 Ind. Cas. 55, 12 C.L.J. 312, Rel. on.) The principle is that a party to an execution proceeding, who allows an order for execution to be passed against him at one stage of the proceedings when he had an opportunity to contest the validity of the order, cannot be permitted at a subsequent stage of the proceedings to re-open the whole matter in controversy. (8 C. 51, 11 C.L.R. 113, 8 I.A. 123, 6 A. 269, 7 A. 102, R.) Even though a notice may be issued to a judgment-debtor upon an application for transfer of a decree, it is not competent for him to appear and contend at that stage that the decree ought not to be transferred because an application for execution thereof is likely to prove infructuous. A notice under s. 248 is not required to be issued upon an application for transfer of a decree. It must be issued by the Court which has seizin of the application for execution. Consequently upon receipt of a notice under s. 248 irregularly issued, it was not only not the duty of the judgment-debtor to appear and urge the objection of limitation, but under the law it was impossible for him to take that step. The judgment-debtor is not debarred from urging his objections on the ground of limitation in a subsequent application for execution. SRIPATI CHARAN v. BELCHAMBERS, 8 Ind. Cas. 22.

(3605-a)—O. 21, r. 22 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 248)—Estoppel—Execution proceedings, —Objection to execution—Service of notice—Transfer of decree, application for—Notice to judgment debtor if necessary.—A mere service of notice upon a judgment-debtor under s. 248 of the Code is not by itself sufficient to debar him from urging the objection that an application is barred by limitation, when no order for execution has been made after the service of notice under s. 248. If, by reason of omission to serve a notice or by reason of a defective notice served upon the judgment-debtor, he has not the opportunity to contest the validity of the proceeding, he is not bound by the doctrine of estoppel. Where a notice under s. 248 of the Code, as required by law, was not issued upon the basis of the application for execution, any order for execution in the course of that proceeding cannot bind the judgment-debtor. Such an order cannot debar him from urging that the previous application for execution was barred by limitation. Even though a notice under s. 248 may be issued to a judgment-debtor upon an application for transfer of a decree, it is not competent to the judgment-debtor, at that stage to contend that the decree ought not to be transferred, because an application for execution is likely to prove infructuous. Whether a decree, in so far as it is still unexecuted, is capable of execution under the law, is a question for determination by the Court to which the decree is transferred, when a proper application for execution is presented to that Court. A notice under s. 248 is not required to be issued upon an application for transfer of a decree. Such notice must be issued by the Court which has seizin of the application for execution, whether it be the original Court which made the decree or is the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution. (3644)—O. 21, r. 29 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 243)—Execution of decree—Stay of execution pending suit filed by judgment-debtor against decree-holder.—S. 243 of the Civ. Pro. Code requires, before any action can be taken on it, that the decree, the execution of which is sought to be stayed, should be the decree of the Court in which the suit is pending and that the plaintiff and defendant in the latter should be the judgment-debtor and the decree holder respectively in the former. The words "such Court" in the section include a Court to which a decree has been transmitted for execution and is not limited to a Court executing its own decree. If the Court, to which an application for a stay of execution is made, declines to stay execution, the Court of appeal can do so on appeal brought against the order refusing stay of execution. But when the suit has been dismissed and appeal is filed against the decree dismissing the suit, the appellate Court is not competent at the appellant's request to stay execution under s. 243. MR. It has nothing to do with the bedding, clothing or cooking utensils, or any other article which may be declared by the jail authorities necessary for the prisoner. The Prisons Act provides for the demand of costs of bedding and clothing supplied to the prisoner by the Jail Superintendent, but both the Code and the Act are silent as to cooking utensils. On the 12th of October, 1882, the interest of N in the house was sold to D. All the brothers of B passed rent-notes in favour of D in respect of the house, the last of which was dated, 4th February 1887. D sued to recover possession of the house, alleging that from 5th August, 1887, that is, after the expiration of the period mentioned in the last rent-note, B and his brothers continued in wrongful possession. An ex parte decree was passed on the 15th October, 1898, against all brothers except one who appeared and admitted D's claim. In execution of this decree by D's heir on the 8th January, 1902, no actual possession of the house was given to him. The plaintiffs, who were entitled to D's property filed a suit on the 6th of July, 1905, to recover the possession of the house. Held, that the suit was barred by limitation. In execution of decrees to recover possession of immoveable property, possession may be obtained in one of two ways: either in the manner prescribed in s. 263 of the Civ. Pro. Code of 1882, or in the manner prescribed in s. 264 of the Code. (3711)—O. 21, r. 40 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 337-A)—Evidence Act, ss. 102, 106.—The language of s. 337-A. Civ. Pro. The judgment-debtor is the party who has to show the Court his right to exemption from the provisions which the judgment-creditor has put in force against him. Ss. 102 and 106 of the Evidence Act imply the same thing. The presumption is that the judgment-debtor has not contracted his debts without the means of paying it, and, therefore, if no evidence at all were given on either side, the judgment-debtor would fail in his claim to exemption from the consequences of his own act. So too, the fact of the judgment-debtor's poverty must be especially within his own knowledge, and cannot be within the knowledge of the creditor except to a limited extent. BHAIMIA AHMED ISMALJEE v. Pro. Code, apply, and as s. 267 is a portion of that chapter, its provisions are also applicable to proceedings taken in the execution of such an order. The word "satisfaction" in s. 267, Civ. Pro. The words "liable to be seized" in s. 267, Civ. Pro. Where the property in question is admittedly the property of the judgment debtor, it is prima facie liable to be seized in execution of a decree against him; and the fact that he has mortgaged it will not prevent its being attached and sold in execution of the decree subject to the mortgage-debt. In re PREMJI TRIKUMDAS, 17 B. 514.

The debtor of the judgment-debtor paid the amount of the decree of the Small Cause Court, notwithstanding a notice issued by the Munsiff's Court, prior to attachment after decree in Small Cause Court, to pay the amount of its decree. Held that the payment into the Small Cause Court was a voluntary payment, at his own risk, in a Court of inferior jurisdiction, with a full knowledge of the attachment by the higher Court. There was therefore no 'realization' of the money paid by the debtor into the Small Cause Court, in the proper sense of the term, by that Court. He was therefore liable to pay the amount once again. The effect of s. 490, Civ. Pro. Code, is to put a person attaching before judgment in the same position as if he had attached, after decree, if decree is passed in his favour after attachment before judgment. RAMASAWMY UDAYAR v. regards injunction and, on 4th May, 1900, made the order, as regards the injunction, absolute. Subsequently, payment not having been made, the Court struck off the plaintiff's execution application, on 18th July. Held, that the order of 4th May cannot be taken as an order effecting an attachment under s. 268, Civ. But the disburser having failed to comply with the direction of the Court, the execution was struck off. Subsequently the allowance was realized in execution of the decrees of other creditors of the judgment debtor, and the decree-holder, whose execution had been struck off, claimed reteable distribution. Held, that the direction of the Court to the disbureer to pay the allowance into Court did not amount to an attachment of the allowance under s. 268 of Act XIV of 1882, that as the execution application was finally struck off, there was no right to rateable distribution of assets realised at the instance of other creditors. Code, attaching before judgment a certain sum of money deposited by the defendant with another, and subsequently obtained a decree. Later on, the judgment-debtor having been declared an insolvent, his estate vested in the official assingee, who preferred a claim to the money under attachment. Held that s. 490 of the Code provided that when property was attached before judgment and a decree was given in favour of the plaintiff, it was not necessary to re-attach the property in execution of the decree. The order of attachment did not purport to deal with any question of title. It prevented alienation and did not confer title. It gave the judgment-creditor certain rights in execution. It did not operate, when these rights were not exercised before the presentation of a petition in insolvency, so as to create in favour of the judgment-creditor a title which prevailed against that of the official assignee under a vesting order of insolvency made after the order of attachment. As, under the Code, an attaching creditor did not obtain a charge or lien on the attached property, there could be no question of the debtor's property vesting in the official assignee subject to an equity in favour of the attaching creditor. Consequently the official assinee was entitled to the money. KRISHNASWAMY MUDALIAR v. One of the exceptions recognized to the general rule that no Court can execute a decree in which the subject-matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property situate entirely outside the local limits of its jurisdiction, is in cases of decrees for sale of mortgaged properties; others have been recognised by the new Civ. to, or demandable by, any person other than the vendor or his duly constituted attorney. There was also a provision, that, so far as was consistent with the then subsisting mortgage executed by the vendor himself, the allowance payable was to be a first charge upon a specified share of the estate. A decree-holder of the vendor applied for recovery of the judgment-debt by attachment of the allowance of Rs. 4,000 from April 1910, up to the date of realisation, and also for rateable distribution of a sum of money, which had been already deposited in Court and represented a portion of the allowance due to the judgment-debtor from November 1909 to January, 1910. He further asked that the allowance for the months of February and March, 1910, which had already accrued due might be attached and made available for the satisfaction of their dues: Held, that an annuity, not yet due, was not garnishable under the provisions of the law, and that r. 46 of O. 21 of the Code was of no assistance to the decree-holder. (9 C.W.N. 703, D.) The term "debt" in O. 51, r. 46 of the Code is used in its legal sense of a debt either due or accruing due. R. 52 of O. 21 of the Code applies only where the property to be attached is in the custody of a public officer. It does not allow of an anticipatory attachment of money expectant to reach the hands of a public officer, and is restricted only to money actually in his hands. RAJA PADMANUND SINGH v. A creditor of the mortgagee, having obtained a money-decree against him, attached the mortgage-debt under s. 268 of the Code of 1882 and at the Court-sale purchased it himself. The creditor then sued to recover the possession of the lands: Held, that, as the mortgage in question was purely usufructuary there was no debt due from the mortgagor which could be attached under s. 268 of the Code of 1882; and that, therefore, the attachment and sale gave the creditor no right to possession of the mortgaged land. Held, also, that, in the case of a purely usufructuary mortgage, where there was no debt payable by the mortgagor, the procedure by attachment under s. 263 was inapplicable: the procedure should be by attachment, under s. 274 of the interest in immoveable property and its sale in accordance with the provisions of the Code. Code, has no application to this case where no attachment of the decree is asked for. (25 M. 244, Expl.) In order to determine whether a particular section of the Civ. Pro. Code, is applicable or not, one must have regard to its language as well as to its scope. S. 273, Civ. Pro. Code, and Rule 184 of the Civil Rules of Practice, deal with cases where a decree is attached in execution, but such a process would be wholly unnecessary in enforcing an ordinary mortgage-decree ordering sale of the property. S. 273, Civ. Pro. Code, which merely enacts a rule of procedure, should not be accorded scope, which would indirectly affect an important question relating to the right of the decree-holder to deal with his right under the decree. On the other hand, s. 232, Civ. Pro. Code, the language of which is quite general, seems to recognise the validity of a pledge of decree as security, no less than the validity of its sale. If the pledge of a decree is valid, it must be within the competence of the Court, which is asked to enfore such a contract, to order the sale of the property pledged. The Transfer of Property Act is not exhaustive, and in cases not sperifically dealt with by that Act the Court acts upon its general power of enforcing contracts. The Courts are not agreed as to the meaning of the word "money-decree" (28 M. 473, 28 B. 630, 26 C. 839, 16 A. 259, R.) and whether a mortgage decree is to be regarded as a money-decree, depends upon the connection in which the question arises. Supposing s. 273, Civ. Pro. Code, applies, a decree for money which is sought to be attached in execution has been held to include a decree upon a mortgage, and the Courts have ruled that the effect of s. 273, Civ. Pro. Code, is to prohibit the sale of a decree for money which has been attached in execution. (2 A. 290, 6 M. 418, 20 C. 111, 16 B. 522, R.) Reading ss. 232, 266, 273 and 284, together, however, it cannot be said that the prohibition contained in s. 273, Civ. Pro. Code, is founded on reasons of public policy or is such, as to oust the jurisdiction of the Court to sell decree, so that a sale in spite of it is a nullity, and confers no right on the purchaser. It would be extending the application of s. 273, Civ. Pro. Code, beyond all reasonable limits to hold that it renders the sale of a money-decree in execution, altogether invalid and without jurisdiction. S. 273 and Rule 184 are mere rules of procedure, the Courts ought not to give them a scope which will interfere with the provisions of s 266, Civ. Pro. Code, or the substantive rights of the creditor recognised by it. Where no objection to such a sale is raised by the holder of the decree, or his creditor, it is not open to the judgment-debtor under that decree to raise any objection. Pro. Code, for rateable distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the property among themselves and the attaching creditor. For, as no attachment of the property had been made in favour of such creditors in the manner prescribed by s. 274 of the Civ. Pro. Code, their claims were not entitled to the protection afforded by s. 276 against private alienation of attached property; their claims could not be enforced under the attachment which had been made; and they could not question the validity of the sale. Per Mahmood, J., s. 276, being a restriction upon private rights of alienation, must be strictly construed. A regularly perfected attachment is a condition precedent to such restriction; orders passed under s. 295 do not amount to such attachment, and even assuming them to be so, the attachment not being duly intimated and notified, the prohibition of s. 276 could not apply to the case. It was necessary that the proclamation of sale should be affixed at or near the property which was to be sold before being affixed to the Court-house. A violation of this rule was an irregularity. S. 311 of the Code permitted an application to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity. The sale was not null and void but could be set aside if there was substantial injury from the irregularity complained of. Obiter.—There could be no distinction between material irregularity and illegality in the mode of conducting a sale under the Code. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to make a distinction between illegality and irregularity and to dispense with proof of actual loss in the one and not in the other, they would have expressed that intention clearly in apt language. In one sense, whatever is irregular is also illegal, as irregularity connotes want of conformity to some recognized rule of procedure, and it was in this sense that the term was used in the Code. S. 311 could only have meant not being in conformity with some one of the rules provided by the Code to regulate execution sales. ARUNACHELAM v. KULANDASAMI, 5 M.L.J. 70.

[F., 11 C.L.R. 303, Not F.; 4 A. 300; R., 5 C.L.J. 687, 5 M.L.J. 70.] Where properties subject to a mortgage are sold in execution of a decree, not only the fact of incumbrance, but also the extent thereof should be specified in the proclamation, and an omission to give such details would be a material irregularity. Where the regularity of a sale-proclamation is in question, the Court ought not to decide upon the reports of the Court officials and to refuse to allow the judgment-debtor to adduce evidence to the contrary; and it is incumbent on the debtor to show that he has sustained material injury by reason of Such statements are made without much consideration and it is well-known that purchasers do not take serious notice of any statement in the sale-proclamation as to the value of the property to be sold. S. 274 of the Civ. Pro. Code, does not require that the sale-proclamation should be served in each of the villages comprised in the property to be sold. The word "property" in that section evidently refers to each "lot" to be sold separately from the rest. Though it is a sound rule to follow, viz., to serve a separate proclamation in each of the villages embraced in the same process when they are at such a distance from one another, that there is no moral certainty of communication to persons on or interested in the one of what is publicly done on the other, the fact, that the processes were not served in each does not necessarily constitute an infringement of the provisions of s. 274, Civ. (3794-c)—O. 21, rr. 57, 58—Execution proceedings — Effect of reversal — Application dismissed for default—Review—Private sale of property—Attachment, object of.—A revival of execution proceeding does not operate as a revival of the attachment so as to prejudice the rights of strangers who have in the interval acquired a title to the property. The reversal of judicial order leaves unaffected the rights of strangers, bona fide purchasers, whether under execution sale or under private sale, who have acquired title on the assumption that such orders were valid in the law. (11 C.L.J. 254, 37 C. 107, R.). The true object of attachment is to place the property in the custody of the Court so as to make it available for the realisation of the fruits of the decree. If, by reason of dismissal of the suit or of the default of the decree-holder, the Court dissolves the attachment, the property ceases to be in the custody of the Court. Upon reversal of the decree or upon cancellation of the order of dismissal for default, the decree-holder may ask the Court to take the property back into its custody, but in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the Court cannot do so with retrospective effect, so as to prejudice a title that may have been acquired in the interval by a stranger, when the property was admittedly not in the custody of the Court. XXI, r. 66, Civ. Pro. Code, upon the judgment-debtor is a "default" within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 57. There is no reason for giving a restricted meaning to the word "default" in O. XXI, r. 57 and confining it to default in appearance, in the payment of process fees, or in the production of documents. The words of O. XXI, r. 57, being explicit and imperative, upon the dismissal of an application for execution for default, attachment ceases, even though the Court and the parties intended that the attachement should subsist. The question for decision was whether or not the suit was barred by s. 283 of the Code and art. 11 of the Limitation Act. Held, the object of the suit, provided for by s. 283 of the Code and art. 11 of the Limitation Act, is not to have the order in the claim proceedings set aside but to have the right of a claimant in the property established. (18 B. 241, 31 C. 228, Diss.) If the party, defeated in the claim proceedings, fail to institute such a suit within the period prescribed by art. 11 of the Limitation Act, the order becomes conclusive as regards the rights of the parties to the proceeding and persons claiming title under them. L.J. 362.] The plaintiff contended in this case that there was no 'investigation' of her claim and that, therefore, the suit was not governed by art. 11 of the Limitation Act. It was found, however, that, on the date fixed for the hearing of the claim, the claimant did not instruct her pleader or appear in person; nor did she produce her evidence; but the records showed that the Court did hold some investigation and found that the claim was untenable. Held, the circumstance of the plaintiff not having chosen to produce the evidence or instruct her pleader could not to take the order out of ss. 280 and 283. The Code directs an investigation, but does not direct the extent to which the investigation ought to proceed. If the Court, having had jurisdiction to decide the matter, did decide it and pass an order, holding such investigation as it deemed fit to hold, the conditions of the claim-sections are satisfied. The plaintiff had an opportunity to produce her evidence. She did not avail herself of the opportunity. The non-production of evidence was due to her laches. The object of ss. 278 to 283 of the Code and art. 11 of the Limitation Act is to secure prompt and speedy determination of questions raised in execution cases and that object would be frustrated if a party, unsuccessful under s. 280 on account of his own laches or voluntary non-production of evidence, were allowed to plead that the order was a nullity, notwithstanding that the proceeding was contentious, until the day of hearing. (3822)—O. 21, rr. 58 to 63—Mortgagee in possession—Claim of mortgagor—Effect—Release of mortgagor's interest.—Rule 59 says: "The claimant must adduce evidence to show that, at the date of the attachment, he had some interest in, or was in possession." This shows that a claim may be made by a person who has an interest in the property, although he is not in possession. There is no doubt that a mortgagee in possession is in possession "on account of or in trust for" the mortgagor, to the extent of the mortgagor's interest, and the property is not in his possession, "as his own property," but partly on his own account, i.e., to the extent of his interest as a mortgagee in possession, and partly on account of the mortgagor, i.e., to the extent of the mortgagor's interest, within the meaning of rule 60, and the Code contemplates and requires the Court to investigate the claim of a mortgagor in such a case, and, if it finds it established, to release the property, to the extent of the mortgagor's interest, from attachment. The judgment-debtor was not a party to the objection-proceedings. In the present suit against the respondent, appellant sought to enforce this charge. The lower Courts held that the respondent is not debarred by s. 283 of the Code from disputing the existence of the alleged charge. The contention, raised, in second appeal, that the respondent as execution-purchaser is as much bound by the order upon the appellant's objection in execution as the decree-holder, was overruled and it was held that the purchaser was not precluded from contesting the charge, by reason of the above order in execution, on the grounds that, if the auction purchaser is to be bound at all by the order, it must be as representative of the decree-holder and the view that the auction-purchaser represents the decree-holder quoad the result of the objection in the execution proceedings involves the anomoly of allowing the former even to file a suit under s. 283 of the Code, a course which seems nowhere to have been contemplated. It was found that the suit was brought one year after the release of the property from attachment in execution of two decrees for money against C; it also appeared that, in the proceedings which ended in releasing the property from attachment, no notice was issued to the judgment-debtor, C. Held, that the suit was not barred. The claimants in possession were not so according to any of the modes of derivation which s. 246, Civ. Pro. Code, enumerates as authorizing the continuance of the possession and the dismissal of the claim. The possession was in the claimants, and there was nothing in the rights of the judgment-debtor which could make such possession his possession. This being so, and assuming that the judgment-debtor was a party to the order made, the order so made could not be said to be against him, because his claim was one which could not have been determined by any order under s. 246. An order admitting a claim which must have been admitted whether the plaintiff's (judgment-debtor's) contention is well or ill founded, cannot be an order against him so as to put him to a period of limitation other than that to which the original action was subject. It might be otherwise if he had been present and promoting a contention of the decree-holder which, if well founded, would have justified the continuance of the attachment. ARAKEL KUNHI KUTTIYALI v. This objection was not tried by the Munsif under s. 246, but he merely said that inasmuch as only the right, title and interest of the defendant's mother was put up for sale, such sale would in no way affect the rights of any other party and consequently there was no necessity of entering into any enquiry regarding the disposal of the objection. On appeal by the claimant to the Judge, the Judge reversed the Munsif's decision. On appeal to the High Court by the decree-holder Held that the Munsif was bound to decide the objection under s. 246. Though the Munsiff had not decided the case under s. 246, he had passed an order between parties, who were, legally speaking, not parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and the Judge had therefore no right to entertain the appeal. Until it has been overruled in a regular suit, brought in virtue of the permission expressly given by the Code, no Court is at liberty afterwards to go behind the order, and enquire whether the Court which disallowed the objection had correctly appreciated the evidence as to possession, or had come to the conclusion as to possession erroneously. In other words, the effect of the order cannot be affected by the propriety or otherwise of the decision at which the Court, which investigated the claim, arrived as to the fact of possession. And as the Code declares that, in the suit brought to contest the order, the claimant must prove his right, it follows that the order, if not set aside, is conclusive as to the right. The facts were these. The disputed property was first hypothecated to the plaintiff, and in execution of the decree on this hypothecation, one R objected to the sale of the property on the ground that it had been purchased by him in execution of a money decree against the mortgagor thereof. The lower Court held on this objection that R's possession was that of a representative of the mortgagor-judgment-debtor, and that he had no right to take objection to the plaintiff's mortgage-lien. The property was accordingly put up for auction-sale and purchased by the plaintiff himself. The present suit was thereupon instituted by the plaintiff. Held that the objection originally preferred by R was precisely the objection contemplated by s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859; that the procedure prescribed by that section was followed by the Court then engaged in executing the mortgage decree for sale; and that an order was made therein against the objector R, in the sense of the last sentence of s. 246 of the Act. The objector R submitted to it, and did not bring the suit provided as his only remedy by the section; and he must be held to be bound by the final order then made; and therefore, the plaintiff should obtain a declaration as prayed for in the present suit. Though, in a sense, the order passed in the first claim was against the judgment-debtor, as diminishing his means of satisfying the first debt, it could not bind him, as he was not a party to the claim-proceedings. Nor was it incumbent on him to sue to establish his right, and any interest he may have had in the property cannot be said to have lapsed by reason of his failure to sue. Pro. Code, 1859, and prayed for the release of the attachment on the ground of purchase prior to attachment. He prayed for time to put in the sale deed after having it registered. The Court refused and the property was sold in execution. More than one year after the Court's refusal, the plaintiff sued to establish his right to the property. Held that the suit was not barred under s. 246 as the order of refusal was not one under s. 546, but was a mere refusal to order a postponement under s. 247, Civ. Pro. Code. SAH MUKHUN LALL PANDAY v. SAH KOONDUN LAL, 15 B.L.R. 228, P.C.=24 W.R. 75=2 I.A. 210=3 Sar. 509. [Appr., 4 B. 21.]

In an investigation under s. 279 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if a claimant to property, which has been attached, proves that, at the date of attachment, he was possessed of the property, the burden of proof that he is not the owner, or that he holds in trust for the judgment-debtor, is on the decree-holder, and if he fails to discharge it, the Court should remove the attachment. In a suit under s. 283, the plaintiffs is entitled so succeed upon proof of possession by him at the time of attachment, if the decree-holder does not prove that he held in trust for the judgment-debtor, or that the attached property is the property of the judgment-debtor liable to present seizure and sale in execution of his decree. The words "in trust for" should be construed in the sense that the claimant held the property as servant or agent for or otherwise on behalf of the judgment-debtor, and that he had no right whatever to the possession of it on his own account if the judgment-debtor claimed it. The order of a Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court disallowing a claim preferred under ss. 278, 282, Civ. Pro. Code by the mortgagees of immoveable property attached in execution of a decree, is a "judgment" within the meaning of s. 15 of Letters Patent, and so is subject to appeal. [Appr., 13 M.L.J. 497, 29 M. 1; R., 13 M.L.J. 362=27 M. 121.] A mortgage-bond was executed in the name of one R, but the amount of the bond was borrowed in several shares from four persons mentioned in the bond, and the respective amounts borrowed from each of the four persons were specified in the bond, which also contained an express provision that when a part payment was made to R, such amount should be distributed by him among all the four creditors according to their respective shares, and that R alone should conduct proceedings against the mortgagors for the purpose of recovering the mortgage-debts. R died leaving a Will appointing executors who did not take out probate. Held that the other mortgagees had "some interest in the property attached" within the meaning of s. 279, Civ. Pro. Code, entitling them to put in a claim petition asking that an attachment of the property by a judgment creditor of the mortgagor may be declared subject to their mortgage. A beneficial or equitable interest is as much an interest within the meaning of s. 279, Civ. Pro Code, as a legal interest in the property attached. SABHAPATHI CHETTI v. In enquires into applications for the removal of attachment, where a Court wanders from the points necessary to be considered and does not make an investigation and pass an order such as the claimant is entitled to in accordance with the terms of ss. 278—281, the High Court will not refuse to grant the extraordinary remedy of revision, notwithstanding that the claimant or objector has open to him a remedy by way of suit under s. 283. The mortgagee paid the balance due under the abovementioned decree into Court, in his own name, but expressly on behalf of his mortgagors, and notice was issued to the decree-holder who drew out some of it. Subsequently, the decree-holder sought to appropriate some of the amount so paid into Court to the payment of debts other than that due under the decree and to obtain attachment and sale of the property affected by that decree, which was then in the possession of the representatives of the mortgagee. Held that, even if s. 278 of the Civ. Pro. Code, were exhaustive and the mortgagees were not entitled within the meaning of that section to object to the attachment of the property in question, they would still, as mortgagees in possession, be entitled to claim that the property should not be held liable to attachment under the former decree. affected under s. 283, Civ. Pro. Code—Limitation Act, XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 11—Applicability.—A decree-holder attached in execution of his decree certain properties belonging to G, the plaintiff respondent as being the property of his judgment-debtors. G put in an application under s. 278 for removal of attachment of her interest in all the properties attached. But the Court, labouring throughout under a misapprehension that a portion only of the attached properties were under attachment, ordered, on the 5th November, 1901, the release of G's interest in that portion from attachment, and its order was silent with regard to the rest of the attached property. Subsequently, the decree-holder again attached, all the properties that were formerly attached and G, having been unsuccessful in claim proceedings, brought the present suit under s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to have her rights declared. It was contended that G's suit had become barred under art. 11, sch. II of the Limitatation Act (XV of 1877), the suit having been brought more than one year after the order passed on the 5th November, 1901, releasing attachment on G's application. Held, that the Court that passed the order of the 5th November 1901, having acted on a misapprehension that only a portion of the properties were under attachment, meant to and did allow G's objection in full and directed the release of the entire property from attachment so far as G's interest was concerned, and that the order did not disallow, under s. 280 or s. 281, Civ. Pro. Code, any part of G's claim, nor was it against G with regard to "any property comprised in that order." Held, therefore, that art. 11, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) did not apply. BHAGWANTI v. GOMAN. 42 P.R. 1909 =88 P.L.R. 1909=52 P.W.R. 1909=1 Ind. Cas. 742.

They do not mean the right or title to the property. The three ss. 278, 281 and 283 must be read together (15 C. 674, 31 C. 228, F.). Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). The decree-holder impeached the mortgage on the ground that it was invalid for want of sanction under s. 257-A, Civ. Pro. Code, and that it was a sham transaction. These points were found against the decree-holder and the claim was allowed. To these proceedings the mortgagor was not a party. No suit was brought by the decree-holder against the said order. But he purchased the property at the Court-sale and then assigned his rights to the appellant. In a suit by the mortgagee to recover money due on his mortgage, held, that it was not open to the appellant to impeach the mortgage on grounds urged by his assignor in the claim proceedings; that the fact that the appellant's assignor became the representative of the judgment-debtor who was no party to the claim proceedings, did not override the estoppel or relieve against the disability imposed by s. 283, Civ. by art. 11 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act, the plaintiffs not having brought a suit to establish their right to the property in dispute within one year from the date of the order made against them, under s. 283, rejecting a claim previously preferred by them on the attachment of the property. The order against the plaintiffs was to this effect, viz., "the sale seems to be collusive: claim rejected." The lower appellate Court was of opinion that there was no bar by limitation, inasmuch as there had been no 'investigation' of the plaintiff's claim within the meaning of that word as used in the Code. Held, that the judgment of the lower appellate Court could not be supported on the ground that there has been no 'investigation.' It is not possible to define the amount of inquiry, which constitutes an 'investigation.' If the order purports to deal with the claim on the merits, it must be taken that there has been an 'investigation' and a suit, therefore, by a person aggrieved thereby will be governed by art. 11 of the Limitation Act. Held, further, that, where after more than a year from the date of the said order, the attachment was raised on payment by one of the mortgagees (defendants in the suit) in possession of the property, such payment not having been made within one year after the date of the order, the order is conclusive as between the claimants (the plaintiffs) and the defendants. To hold that the right of an unsuccessful claimant to bring a suit remains in a state of suspended animation for an indefinite period, after the expiration of a year from the date of the order against him, liable to be revived at any moment by the payment off the amount of the decree, would lead to uncertainty of title and great inconvenience and would be inconsistent with the policy of the legislature in prescribing a short period of limitation for suits by parties, against whom an order has been made in claim proceedings. Pro. Code, dismissed the suit. Held that the disposal of the appeal by the lower appellate Court on the preliminary point was erroneous. There were no elements in the case to have given the first Court jurisdiction to proceed or pass any order under s. 331 of the Code. The resistance or obstruction mentioned in s. 331 must be of the description contemplated by s. 328, i.e., a resistance or an obstruction, in the execution of a decree for the possession of property, to the officer charged with the execution of the warrant for delivery of possession. In this case there was no resistance or obstruction to any officer, but such obstruction as there was, was by the defendant filing his objection in the Court. The order of the executing Court must therefore be taken as passed under s. 278 and, at any rate, could not operate as a bar to this suit relating to immoveable property. MAHABIR PRASAD v. (3954)—O. 21, rr. 60, 63 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 280, 283)—Settlement—Attachment—Claim—Sale — Purchase of settlor's right—Right to set aside deed - Fraud—Suit on behalf of all creditors—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 95.—N executed a trust deed conveying his immoveable property to trustees in trust for his life or until he became insolvent and then for his wife and children. Subsequently, he filed a suit against H and it was dismissed with costs. In execution of the decree for costs, H attached a certain item of the trust property. The trustee claimed to have the attachment removed and the claim was dismissed. H brought the property to a sale and purchased the same. He took possession and enjoyed the same for six years. After H's death, his executors sued the trustees, and wife and children of N for a declaration that the defendants had no right in the property, that they (the plaintiffs) as executors of H were absolutely entitled to it and that the trust-deed was fraudulent and void against the plaintiffs and other creditors of N. The necessity for the suit arose from the difficulty experienced in finding a sale for the property owing to the claim put forward by the defendants. On the question of limitation, held that the suit was not barred. Art. 95 did not apply to the case. The main relief in the case was the declaration of plaintiffs' title to the property on the basis of the sale to H six years ago. The prayer in the plaint for a declaration that the settlement was fraudulent and void against the plaintiffs and other creditors of N, must be taken to be ancillary to the main relief. On the question of the effect on the order on the claim petition, it was held that the portion of s. 280, Civ. Pro. Code, relied on only applies where the property is in the possession of the judgment-debtor "partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person." In this case, the property was at the time of the attachment and had been for some months previously in the sole possession of the trustees, and neither wholly nor partly in the possession of the judgment-debtor. The conditions upon which the latter part of s. 280, Civ. Pro. Code, becomes applicable were not present in the case and the Judge was not called upon to make any declaration as to the precise limits of the interest in the property upon which he held the attachment to be maintainable. Therefore there was no such order passed against the interests represented by the wife and children of N as to come under the terms of s. 283, Civ. Pro. Code. Held, further, that H purchased only the right, title and interest of N and therefore the plaintiffs as executors of H were entitled only to an estate for the life of N. The Court having found that the trust-deed was fraudulent and void as against the creditors, held that the plaintiffs who claimed under a certificate of sale which vested in them the right, title and interest of N, were not prima facie entitled to claim the benefit of the right established in favour of N's creditors. The plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed as the suit was not filed by them on behalf of and for the benefit of all the creditors of N. The principal prayer of the plaintiffs was that they themselves should be declared absolutely entitled to the premises, the subject-matter of the suit. The other prayers, even that about the declaration of the invalidity of the deed as against creditors, were more or less ancillary to that prayer. BURJORJI DURABJI PATEL v. The property was sold at a Court-sale subject to the lien and purchased by N. U then sued N to recover the amount of the lien. Where the right of the defendant in the land is an interest in the land and is property, a suit by the plaintiff, to declare his right to recover his decree debt from it, denied by the defendant, will lie under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, 1877. As the Civ. Pro. Code does not deal with the forms of suit, the substance and merits of the case should be kept in view and not merely the words in the plaint. whether the property sought to be attached was, at the date of the attachment, in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him. If that be found against the judgment-debtor, the plaintiff, the original decree-holder, is entitled to the declaration which is sought. In such a suit, the other creditors of the judgment-debtor need not necessarily be added; and the attaching creditor, the judgment-debtor and the alleged transferee, are the only proper parties. But in such a suit, the Court has no power to set aside the order passed in the previous claim case with a refund of the costs, as the suit is not in any sense an appeal, but only one for declaration of the plaintiff's right. Code, gives a special permission to sue for the right claimed, and that is the title of the judgment-debtor to the property, following which is the right of the plaintiff to attach that property. The plaintiff here did not seek for possession of the property, and attachment would be made if the plaintiff desired it, under his original decree. Thus, even assuming that the second paragraph of s. 42, Specific Relief Act, applies to a suit of the nature specially provided for under s. 283, it is clear that the plaintiff in this case has a right to sue for a mere declaratory decree. Code, 1882, is one to set aside the order passed upon the claim to attached property and is a form of appeal therefrom, the passing of the order forming the plaintiff's cause of action and that, in such a suit, the plaintiff cannot ask for a declaration that he has a mortgage-lien or charge on such property. VEERA PANNADI v. KARUPPA PANNADI, 6 M L T. 154=2 Ind. Cas. 980. (35 C. 202, P.C.=7 C.L.J. 36=12 C.W.N. 169=10 Bom. L.R. 1=5 A.L.J. 10=2 M.L.T. 506, F.)

(3983)—O. 21, r. 63 (=s. 283, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Suit to establish right to property, removal of attachment of which had been refused.—The Code of Civil Procedure does not indicate the form in which a suit should be brought under s. 283, but the effect of such a suit is clear enough. Under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the party, against whom an order under ss. 280, 281 or 282 is passed, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive. The language seems distinct enough. It implies that the execution order is subject to the result of the suit, or, in other words, is affected by the decree, whatever it may be, either by way of confirmation, modification or reversal. Consequently, the effect of a decree affirming the right of the intervenor to the property attached as that of the judgment-debtor has the effect of declaring the execution proceedings against such property to be null and void, and, as if they had never been so far as they have transferred possession of the property to any one else. The suit here was virtually of the nature of a suit for the return of moveable property, or for its value as compensation for wrongful conversion, and it was necessary to get over the preliminary obstacle of the existence of the order of attachment before the suit could succeed, and there seemed to be no reason why everything requisite should not be done in the same suit. (3984)—O. 21, r. 63 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 283)—Scope—Declaration and consequential relief—Causes of action—Parties—Misjoinder—Election—Duty of Court.—The plaintiff, first defendant and some other defendants were members of an undivided Hindu family. One of the creditors of the first defendant attached a part of the family property in execution of a decree obtained by him against that defendant. The plaintiff applied to have the attachment raised in so far as it affected his share and interest in the property attached. His application was disallowed in 1889. He, thereupon preferred a regular suit for the declaration of his right denied in execution proceedings and also for the partition of his share of the family property. He made all his co-parceners defendants in the suit, and also two other persons, one the purchaser at the sale which followed the attachment abovementioned, and the other a mortgagee of the share of the first defendant in the family property. Held, that: the suit was not bad either for misjoinder of parties or for misjoinder of causes of action. A purchaser or mortgagee of a co parcener's share in the joint property is a proper and a necessary party to a suit for partition. It is both good sense and established law that all parties interested in the property to be divided must be brought before the Court in one proceeding. A suit instituted in accordance with the provisions of s. 283 of the Code need not be limited to the

In the course of a claim proceeding, the judgment-debtor attended the Court and gave evidence. The order allowing the claim did not recite that it was made in the presence of the defendant. It merely stated that the claimant was in possession and the defendant was not. It did not refer to the question of title. The question now was whether the judgment-debtor was bound to institute a suit whithin one year under s. 283 of the Code. There was no satisfactory evidence that the judgment-debtor had notice of the claim. Held that, having regard to the inconclusive character of the evidence as to service of notice on the judgment-debtor, to the fact that it did not appear on the face of the order that the judgment-debtor appeared as a party at the proceedings in which the order was made, and to the fact that the terms of the order were not necessarily inconsistent with the title being in the judgment-debtor, the order could not be said to have been made against the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 283 of the Code. Defendant No. 1 was a mortgagee of A and he contested the claim on the ground that his mortgagor A was not the tenant-at-will of the plaintiffs but a permanent tenant. The lower appellate Court was of opinion that the above contention of defendant No. 1 was res judicata by reason of the omission to file a suit, within a year of an order passed against him under s. 280 of the Civ. Pro. Code in certain execution proceedings in which he had asserted the permanent nature of A's tenancy. The execution Court had then decided in favour of the plaintiffs, leaving the first defendant to establish his case by a regular suit, and the first defendant not having brought the suit within the time allowed by law, the order removing the attachment had become conclusive against him under the operation of s. 283, and he was therefore estopped from raising the matter in his defence in the present suit. That order, however, could not bind the other defendants, the heirs and representatives of A, who were not parties to the proceedings in which that order was passed and were therefore not bound, as the first defendant was, to bring any suit to establish their title. Also the first defendant in possession could set up as jus tertii the title of those other defendants in support of his possession under the mortgage, the legality of which had not been questioned in the previous execution proceedings. The lower Courts were therefore held to be wrong in having disposed of the case on the preliminary point of res judicata, and their decrees were therefore reversed and the case remanded to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits raising an issue as to the title of the plaintiffs as against defendants. Per Ranade, J.—Where there has been no investigation in the attachment proceedings, the order passed therein cannot have a conclusive effect, and art. 11 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) cannot apply to such cases. In this case, the order in the previous execution proceedings expressly avoided deciding the question of the rights of A, and of the mortgage by him to the first defendant. It must therefore be held to have been passed without investigation, and in such view the omission of the first defendant to bring a regular suit within 12 months did not preclude him from raising his defence in the present suit. When a Judge finds sufficient reasons for the postponement of a sale, he ought not to make it a condition that no further notification of sale should take place. The notification may be a matter of vital importance to the judgment-debtor, and may be a matter of very great importance to the creditor, because having no notification might limit the number of possible purchasers, and might affect even those persons who came to the sale, as they would have no proper data from which to estimate the value of the property and make their bids. The judgment-debtor subsequently appeared and objected that the sale was void, the property being ancestral. The District Judge found that a portion of the property was ancestral, and set aside the sale. Held, that the sale was rightly set aside, as the Civil Court, in acting upon the affidavit of the decree holder, had reversed the order laid down in the rule. The object of the rules was to prevent the sale of ancestral land by any Court other than the Collector, and they contemplated and directed a full and proper enquiry. In carrying out the sale of ancestral property, the Civil Court grasped at a jurisdiction not vested in it. The mere fact of the

by the Court and the decree was satisfied, P brought a suit against G for a declaration that G's mortgage was without consideration, and made with a view to defraud P. It was contended by the defendant G that P, whose decree was satisfied, was no longer a judgment-creditor but only a purchaser; and that what was attached and sold was an equity of redemption, and that the purchaser could not therefore claim more than he brought: Held, negativing the first contention, that the suit was brought by P before the sale had been confirmed, and before the decree had been satisfied and while P was still a judgment-creditor. Held, further, that what was attached and sold was the immoveable property believed to be unincumbered and not the equity of redemption. A purchaser at the Court sale of attached property believed to be incumbered (s. 287, Civ. Pro. Code), is not bound by estoppels which would have bound the judgment-debtor. XXI, r. 66 Sub-Rule (2) of the Code only enables him to put his case before the Court, but if the decree-holder insists that a much smaller valuation should be inserted in the sale proclamation and the Court accepts his view of the matter, the decree-holder proceeds to the sale at his risk and its validity may be subsequently challenged by the judgment-debtor. If the judgment-debtor, with notice of the proceedings, does not object to the entry in the sale proclamation at that stage, a subsequent objection by him on the ground of inaccuracy or insufficiency of description, is not likely to be entertained by the Court. The enquiry under O. XXI, r. 66 of the Code is intended to be of a summary character. The validity of judicial sales, properly conducted, should be supported and should not be allowed to be assailed on technical grounds. At the same time, the purity of judicial proceedings in connection with execution sales should be secured to at least a reasonable extent. Obiter :—When a sale is adjourned under s. 291 of the Code of 1882, it is necessary to mention the hour of sale and its non-specification is a material irregularity. The officer draws up the certificate and the Court thereon proceeds to order recovery of the amount of the deficiency on re-sale. Such order is in effect an administrative and not a judicial order, and there are no enactments or rulings against the maintainability of a sepacate suit to question such an order and the jurisdiction of the Court to try the same. The certificate, mentioned in s. 293 of the Code, as having to be issued by the officer conducting the sale, is not so essential a preliminary that without it a Civil Court cannot, at the instance of the judgment-creditor or judgment-debtor, order a recovery from the defaulter. Two things are provided for by that section. If he gets that permission and gets it without qualification, then the amount due on the mortgage may if he so desires, be set off. Civ. Pro. Code (Acts V of 1908, XIV of 1882, X of 1877, XXIII of 1861 and VIII of 1859)—continued.

Effect of setting aside sale—Right of bona fide purchaser for value from purchaser at Court auction—Confirmation of sale before thirty days—Setting aside sale on application presented after expiry of thirty days—Power of High Court to intervene.—In cases in which, under s. 294 of the Code, a sale was liable to be set aside on the ground that the decree-holder himself made the purchase, directly or through another, the section only contemplated the setting aside of the sale in toto and did not warrant its being set aside in part. Under the section, an application could be made by the judgment-debtor or any other person interested in the sale. Persons entitled under s. 295 to rateable distribution in the assets realized by the sale, and as such interested in the sale, were entitled under s. 294 to apply for setting aside the sale. But the sons of the judgment-debtor who were not parties to the suit could not come in under the section as they are neither judgment-debtors, nor persons interested in the sale. The effect of setting aside a sale under s. 294 was that the judgment debtor who had been benefited by satisfaction of the decree, either in whole or in part, by reason of the sale, had to make restitution by the re-opening of the decree (the purchase money if paid being refunded to the decree-holder purchaser) and the decree-holder was responsible for any deficiency in the price on re-sale and for the expenses incidental thereto. As a purchase by the decree-holder without the permission of the Court (whether made by himself or through another person) was under s. 294 only voidable and not void, it could not be avoided against a transferee in good faith for valuable consideration. [F., 30 M. 295=17 M.L.J. 165=2 M.L.T. 186.] Under ss. 312 and 314, no sale could be confirmed and become absolute before the expiration of thirty days reckoned from the date of the sale. Where a sale held in contravention of s. 294 of the Code was set aside on an application being made long after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed therefor the High Court could intervene under s. 622 of the Code when the matter comes to its notice in a suit between the sons of the judgment-debtor and the purchaser, and set aside the order setting aside the sale on the ground that the lower Court had acted illegally and with material irregularity. XIX, a decree-holder buying with permission under s. 294, and desiring to set off his purchase-money against the amount of the decree, is not exempt from the necessity of making, at the time of sale, a deposit of 25 per cent. on the amount of such purchase-money, and such deposit must be made in cash. The option so to set-off the purchase-money cannot be exercised by the purchaser until the confirmation and payment of expenses of the sale. Where, however, all parties interested in the amount to be deposited have waived their right to have that amount deposited in cash, the sale ought not to be set aside on the ground that the cash deposit has not been made. The application not having been presented within 15 days from the date of sale, the Court set aside the sale and directed that the 25 per cent. of the purchase-money, which had been paid, should be forfeited. Held, that it was not necessary that the application under s. 294, Civ. Pro. Code, should be made within 15 days from the date of sale and the reason for the provision in s. 307 of the Code does not exist in cases where the decree-holders are the purchasers. Held therefore, that, as the decree-holder applied to have the balance of the purchase-money set-off against the amount due under his decree, the application should have been allowed and the deposit should not have been forfeited. If, however, the officer conducting the sale neglects to demand the deposit immediately and the purchaser does not pay it, and if the property is not put up again for sale, it ought to be held that there has nevertheless been a valid sale in execution of the decree, the failure to pay the deposit amounting only to an irregularity in conducting the sale. A benami transaction does not vest any title to an immoveable property, the subject of such a transaction, in the benamidar, and therefore such a person cannot maintain a suit which is based on title, such as a suit in ejectment. (16 C. 364, 35 C. 551, 34 C. 717, 30 M. 245, 20 M. 495, 30 C. 265, R.) A benamidar properly so-called is not a trustee, for he is not the owner of the legal estate, although he holds the property for the benefit of the real owner; nor can a trustee, in whom the legal estate is vested, properly be called a benamidar. Similarly it would be a misnomer to call an agent, who has entered into a contract but without disclosing the fact that he is an agent, benamidar of his principal, in the sense of (35 C. 551, 30 M. 245, R.). Though the sale is in invitum, there is no reason why the acceptance of the bid by the officer of the Court should not have the effect of a contract with such officer, simply because the rights and liabilities arising under it are regulated in many respects by the special provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code. The policy underlying ss. 306 to 317 of the Code of 1882 is to recognise the certified purchaser as the proper person to seek to set aside a fraudulent sale. (4171)—O. 21, r. 86 (=s. 308, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Execution—Sale—S. 308 of the Code of Civil Procedure is imperative in its terms. Its provisions are intended to prevent the delay and waste of labour which may arise from persons thoughtlessly entering into, or wantonly abandoning, contracts of sale formally conducted by the public servants, and the only cases in which relief from the liabilities incurred in such formal proceedings can be accorded under the Code are cases in which, owing to the circumstances beyond the control of the purchaser, the sale has been set aside by the Court or proved entirely infructuous. Hence, a mere abandonment of a sale in execution proceedings without due reason given is no ground for dispensing with the enforcement of penalty which attaches under s. 308 of the Code, not on the holding of a second sale, but as a deterrent to prevent a defaultwhich renders nugatory the formal proceedings already held. He was, therefore, a person entitled to ask for cancellation of the sale under the section. The contention in this case that no appeal lay from the lower Court's orders adverse to the mortgagee was overruled on the ground that the question of setting aside the sale in the case was one which arose in relation to the execution of the decree between the purchaser at the sale who was the decree-holder himself and the applicant who was also a party to the suit, and that the order must therefore

The question for decision was, whether the purchaser was a person 'whose immoveable property was sold' within the meaning of s. 310-A. Held, the sale to the purchaser from the judgment-debtor was subsequent to the attachment. Second defendant who was a subsequent mortgagee of part of the hypotheca, and third and fourth defendants who were subsequent purchasers of a part, proved that they had cleared off mortgages which were prior to the mortgage executed by first defendant, and the Court therefore allowed to second, third, and fourth defendants a prior charge. The decree directed that the mortgaged property be sold and that the sale-proceeds go to clear off the prior charges of second, third, and fourth defendants before any payment to plaintiff. The property was sold and plaintiff was permitted to bid, and he purchased the mortgaged lands for Rs. 1,379 which he paid into Court. Meanwhile, second defendant had filed a suit in the Court on his subsequent mortgage, had obtained a decree, and had brought to sale and purchased his hypotheca subject to the prior mortgage held by plaintiff. The second defendant paid into Court Rs. 8,263-11-0 which comprised the decree amount and five per cent. on the purchase-money, and got the sale set aside under s. 310-A. Plaintiff thereupon applied for a refund of his purchase-money and also for the whole of the decree amount. Held that he was entitled to a refund of his purchase-money and also to the whole of his decree-amount without any deduction being made on account of the prior charges, that the second, third and fourth defendants were entitled to the payment of the amounts adjudged to them only out of the sale-proceeds, and that there were no sale-proceeds in this case inasmuch as the sale was set aside under the provisions of s. 310-A, Civ. XXI of the Civ. Pro Code to have the execution sale, in which the decree-holder was the purchaser, set aside, on the thirtieth day from the date of sale. Their agent was present in Court with money and was ready to deposit it; for that purpose a challan was duly filled up and placed in the hands of the proper officer for signature of the presiding officer; and he was informed latter on in the day, that as the Presiding officer had left the Court, his signature could not be obtained on that day. The result was that the challan was signed on the following day, and the money received on the authority thereof by the treasury officer. Held—That the sale should be set aside. A mere presentation of an application without deposit of money within 30 days, under r. 92 of O. XXI of the Civ. Pro. Code, is not sufficient compliance with the law. When a party litigant has found it impossible to comply with the requirements of the statute, not because of his own fault, but by reason of the action or inaction of the Court, the principle applicable to such a contingency is expressed by the maxim "Actus Curiæ neminem gravabit." (An act of Court prejudices no man). As the order is passed under r. 92 of the Civ. Pro. Code, in proceedings between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, a second appeal lies under s. 47 of the said Code. The period of thirty days, within which the judgment-debtor could apply under s. 310-A, Civ. Pro Code, to have the sale set aside, expired when the Court executing the decree was closed. The Court re-opened on the 18th November, 1901. On that date, the judgment-debtor applied under s. 310-A to have the sale set aside. Before the property was sold, the decree was adjusted in whole to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, but such adjustment was not certified by the decree-holder to the Court executing the decree until after the sale. In his application the judgment-debtor alleged that nothing was due to the decree holder. On the 19th November, 1901, the judgment-debtor deposited the required amount in the Government Treasury for payment to the purchaser. It was found that he was prevented from depositing the money payable to the purchaser in the Government Treasury on the 18th November, because, on that date, the tender was not returned to him by the office of the Subordinate Judge, until after the Government Treasury was closed. Held, that the decree-having been adjusted in whole since the date of the sale-proclamation and the decree-holder having certified such adjustment on the 18th November, the day on which the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside, it was not necessary to deposit the amount specified in the sale-proclamation as due under the decree. Held, further, that under s. 7, General Clauses Act, 1887, the judgment-debtor was entitled to make his application and to deposit the money required on the day on which the Court re-opened, the period prescribed by s. 310-A, Civ. Pro. Code, having expired while the Court was closed. Held, also, that, if it was the fault of the officials of the Court and not of the judgment-debtor that the money was not deposited in the Government Treasury on the 18th November, the deposit of the money on the 19th November should be considered as having been made in due time, on the principal that "an act of Court shall prejudice no man." The policy of the section is to prevent a person who determines to impeach a sale under s. 311 from at the same time obtaining the benefit of the concession granted under s. 310-A. There was no direct evidence connecting the irregularities with the lowness of the price, but the Subordinate Judge had inferred that the latter had been caused by the former. Held, that such an inference might be drawn and that in a case under s. 311, Civ. The Court must find that there has been substantial injury to the person concerned and that such injury was caused by the material irregularity complained of, but these are facts which must be determined according to the ordinary rules of evidence. District Judge in his return found:—That the Nazir was really ill on the day of the sale. That the Nazir and the auction-purchaser S were connections by marriage, and that the allegation that there was enmity between the Nazir and the objector was false. That the intrinsic value of the property was about Rs. 18,000 at the time of sale, though it was knocked down for Rs. 1,500 only. That there were reasons why this property should have been sold at a sum which prima facie appears to be very inadequate. That, dispite all these facts, there is no proof of the fraud alleged. On the return coming up again before Chatterji, J., the learned Judge referred the case to a Division Bench. Held, by the Division Bench—That it had no power to re-open the question of the alleged irregularities upon which Chatterji, J. had given his decision sitting as Single Bench. The onus of proving fraud rests upon the party alleging it, and that in every case a plea of fraud must precise and definite in its particulars. Fraud is not to be lightly presumed, but must be established by clear and definite evidence. And in the present case, though it is impossible to deny circumstances which suggest collusion and fraud on the part of the auction-purchaser, the decree-holder and the District Nazir, still positive proof of such fraud is wanting. That there were many reasons why bidders should not have been forthcoming at the sale, and therefore the price fetched (Rs. 1,500) could not be considered as an inadequate price. Assuming for the sake of agrument that M, the decree-holder, and S. the auction-purchaser actually conspired together not to bid agrinst each other (a fact which is by no means established on the evidence), fraud would not thereby be established. In such cases all that can be required of purchasers is that they should abstain from breaches of trust and from intimidation or falsehood in keeping off bidders. PT. SEWA DAT PERSHAD v. S. 311, Civ. Pro. Code, requires material irregularity with its resulting loss to be shown for setting aside his purchase, just as in the case of any other purchaser. The fact that, on the date of the sale, an agreement was entered into between such decree-holder and a third person, the former undertaking to sell away the property, when purchased, to the latter for a particular amount, the agreement constituting a concert between the two to dissuade intending purchasers from bidding at the auction, was held not to be a sufficient ground for setting aside the sale on an application under s. 311 of the Code. Also, even if the above agreement had been entered into before the application for leave to bid, there was no obligation on the part of decree-holder to have disclosed such agreement to the Court so that his omission to disclose the same to the Court could not render the leave to bid granted ineffectual, in the absence of any allegation or proof of fraud upon the Court that executed the decree. One who seeks to set aside a purchase completed under the sanction of the Court, should state the grounds on which he claims to impeach it, and should not be allowed after the trial of the case to rely on other grounds which have not been the subject of trial or adjudication in the Court which takes the evidence. It is not easy to formulate a rule which will fit every case, but the principle is clear enough, that a party shall not be condemned in Court on allegations which turn on evidence and which he has not been led to rebut by evidence. It is always unsatisfactory to reverse a decree for the reason that the ground on which it rests was not that on which the parties came to issue. But it is obvious that great injustice may be done by shifting the issue in the Court of appeal, and so deciding without due investigation. MAHOMED v. SAVVASI, 2 Bom. He, again, applied on the 6th August, 1897, to the Civil Court to have the sale set aside. Held, that the second application was time-barred; that the Collector having had no jurisdiction to entertain the application made to him, the first application could not save limitation under s. 14 of the Limitation Act; and that the second application could not be considered to have been made under s. 311 of the Civ. A brother of the judgment-debtor applied, without making the purchaser a party to his application, for the sale being set aside, stating that he was the undivided brother of the judgment-debtor, and the property was that of their joint family, and also alleging material irregularity. The Court of first instance dismissed the application. The lower Court made the purchaser a party, but erroneously proceeded to decide upon the evidence recorded when the purchaser was no party. The proper course for the applicant was held to be a regular suit and not his present application. If the property attached and sold was joint as stated

Though "judgment-debtor" is not here so defined as to include a representative, yet the representative should be given the same opportunity of guarding his interest, as the judgment-debtor himself. S. 313, however, does not prescribe that the notice is to be served before the application, and art. 172 of Act XV of 1877 only requires that the application shall be made, not that notice shall be served, within sixty days from the sale. Code, 1882, ss. 313, 314)-Decree for forcelosure—Sale in execution of decree—Refund of purchase money*—A decree for foreclosure of certain mortgaged property allowed the morigagor up to 20th July, 1883, to redeem. On the 30th June 1883, the property was put up for sale in execution of a decree against the mortgagor held by the respondent in this case and was purchased by the appellant. Before the date on which the sale could be confirmed, the time allowed by the foreclosure decree expired without the mortgage-money being deposited. The purchaser subsequently objected to the confirmation of the sale, and asked for the refund of the purchase-money on the ground that, when he purchased the property, the judgment-debtor had not, under the circumstances, any saleable interest in the property, within the meaning of s. 313 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, Held that, in the present case the existence of the foreclosure decree against the property, in itself, could not extinguish the judgment-debtor's right before foreclosure, and that at the date of the sale he had such an interest in the property as could be sold in execution of a decree. It is true that, under s. 314 of the Civ. Pro. Code, an auction-sale in execution of a decree does not become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court, but the appellant purchased the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor existing and saleable when the auction-sale of the 30th June took place, and it cannot therefore be held that his case falls under the purview of s. 313 of the Code. The plaintiff instituted this suit, against the mortgagee and the representatives of the mortgagor, for contribution as against the remainder of the mortgaged property. Held, that an auction-

purchaser must be taken to buy the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment-debtor's title, except as provided by ss. 313 and 315 of the Code; that, in the absence of fraud, his only remedy is to recover back his purchase-money, where it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property at all, and that he cannot, by suit, any more than by application, obtain a refund in proportion to the extent to which the judgment-debtor had no interest. That, in this case, the judgment-debtor has admittedly an interest in the house, and, therefore, ss. 313 and 315 are inapplicable. Under the circumstances, the rule of caveat emptor applied, and the fact that the plaintiff (the auction-purchaser) had been deprived of a portion of the property purchased by him, does not entitle him to contribution against the owners of the other portions of the property, which were subject to the mortgage under which the property was sold to him. penultimate paragraph of s. 320, refer to the Court alluded to in the previous portion of the section., viz., the Court to which application was made for the execution of the decree and which, as such Court, transmitted the decree to the Collector for execution. So, the penultimate paragraphs of the section does not take away the jurisdiction of any Court other than the Court rererred to in it. The last paragraph of s. 312 is not happily worded. An order under that section must be either an order confirming the sale or an order setting aside the sale. An order of the latter description cannot be sought to be set aside on the ground of irregularity, i.e., of the existence of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. The suit which is forbidden by the last para. of the section cannot, therefore, be a suit to set aside any order passed under the section, but must be a suit to set aside an order passed under the first para. of the section only. Consequently there is no prohibition against the institution of a suit to set aside an order refusing to confirm a sale. SHIAM BEHARI LAL v. RUP KISHORE, 20 A. 379, F.B. = A.W.N. 1898, 81.

Although the title to the property sold vests in the purchaser from the date of the confirmation, he does not acquire the right, title and interest, of the judgment-debtor, as they stand on that date. If he has purchased in execution of a money decree, he takes the property as it stood on the date of the attachment and is not affected by any subsequent dealings therewith on the part on the judgment-debtor. the consequence of his purchase cannot be listened to. (5 I.A. 116, R.) A fortiori where a purchaser had allowed a sale, by the Court to him, to be confirmed and the purchase-money to be paid over to the judgment-creditor, he cannot be allowed to succeed in a suit for the recovery of that purchase-money. Before a suit for the refund of purchase-money can be maintained, two events must occur—first, it must have been found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest and, secondly, the purchaser must be deprived of the property. (22 B. 783, R.) A suit for the return of purchase-money will be maintainable, where there has been a total failure of consideration. The procedure under s. 315 of the Code is by summary application within a limited time and not by suit. such suit.—The only right acquired by the purchaser, at a Court sale, of the share of one member of an undivided Hindu family is a right to effectuate the sale by a suit for partition of the entire joint property of the family and the delivery over to him (the purchaser) of what might be allotted to the share of the said member at the partition. In such cases, it is not competent for the Court on a mere application for execution by the purchaser, to enforce his right by an order for partition. No orders, therefore, of the kind contemplated by s. 318 of the Code can be passed on such applications. Code, has the wider general meaning and it includes constructive and symbolical possession quite as much as actual physical possession. There is nothing in these sections to limit the word "possession" to actual physical possession. Possession of immoveable property is not the less real or actual, because it is enjoyed through tenants, servants, or member or members of one's family. Candy, J.—The words "claiming to be in possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor" in s. 331 of the Civ. Pro. Code may be taken as including a person who is not in personal occupation of the land, but who claims to be in possession through the person who is in actual possession. Possession by a gardener or a servant is the possession of the owner. But possession by a tenant is different: where the alleged tenant is a third party and not the judgment-debtor, and where he is said to be in possession as the tenant of a landlord, who is also not a party to the suit, then the obstruction to the Court's officer would naturally and probably be made by the tenant who is on the spot and he would then be the person who would be summoned under s. 328, and who would be the claimant under s. 331 claiming to be in possession on account of his landlord who is other than the judgment-debtor. When such a claim is registered as a suit the person alleged to be the landlord will naturally be joined as a party, and the dispute will then be thoroughly investigated. But where the tenant is the judgment-debtor, and is thus debarred from making a claim under s. 331, and the third party who claims to be the landlord of the tenant in possession actually obstructs the Court's officer, then that third party is entitled to intervene under s. 341. Quære.—Having regard to the Explanation to s 647, Code of Civil Procedure, it is questionable whether s. 575 of the Code is applicable when an application is made to the High Court under s. 622, Civ. arising under s. 283, Civ. Pro. Code, so, in cases falling under s. 335, Civ. Pro. But to render an order under either of the sections referred to so operative, it is essential that the Court passing it should have arrived at a definite conclusion as to the matter to be decided under the particular portion of the law under which the Court is acting. Where the Court, in investigating a claim under s. 335, Civ. Pro. Sometime after this, the minor step-brothers of V having separated from V and the lands to which the obstruction was offered having been allotted to the minor's share, V took no further part in the miscellaneous proceeding that followed the obstruction, and on the 6th August 1898, the Court passed an order under s. 335 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, in favour of defendants. The minors brought a suit on the 11th November, 1903, to establish their title to the lands. Both lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred under art. 11 of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as it was instituted more than a year after the order passed under s. 335 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held, that the order was no bar to plaintiff's suit, since V did not represent the minors when the order under s. 335 of the Civ. Pro. Code was made. SHIDAPPA RAYAPPA v. An order under that section should be the result of the fact that the defendant in the suit, who is precluded by the decree from disputing plaintiff's right, unjustly instigates a third party, who has no real interest in the property, to prevent the plaintiff from getting the benefit of his execution. The Court has no power, under s. 329, to decide important questions, whose merits are wholly apart from, and unaffected by, the fact of obstruction caused at defendant's instigation. The Court should, under s. 331, number and register, as a suit, an application by the obstructor, who claims in good faith, to be, on his own account, in possession of property, against which execution has been taken out. The judgment-debtor is not competent to make an application under s. 335 of the Code, which refers to resistance or obstruction by, or the dispossession of, a person other than the judgment-debtor. The term 'possession' in s. 336, as in other similar sections of the Code, is not used in a restricted sense, as relating to a mere tangible or physical possession, but includes constructive possession, or possession in law, by receipt of rent or otherwise. He accordingly filed a claim against them, which was registered as a suit under s. 331 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to remove the obstruction and to recover possession. In answer to the claim, defendants objected that the land belonged to a third person from whom they derived title. It was held on second appeal, that in such a suit, when possession is shown to have been with the plaintiff, the defendants have not without showing title in themselves, that liberty to impeach the plaintiff's title, or to set up a jus tertii; under such circumstances the only successful defence would be that the defendants were themselves the owners of the land and the onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff's will rest upon them. On a caveat entered by N. the cause was set down as contentious and pending the hearing, S. died, and P., his sole widow and heiress, applied that her name, as his sole widow and heiress, might be substituted for his name, and that the petition for probate might be amended by substituting a prayer for letters of administration with copy of the will annexed instead of a prayer for probate. Held, that the right to sue did not survive to the widow of the executor and that the suit abated. The right to sue, in O. 22, means the right to bring a suit, asserting a right to the same relief which the deceased plaintiff asserted at the time of his death, and that a right to obtain probate of a will is a right different in its nature from a right to be appointed by the Court to administer the deceased's estate. SARAT CHANDRA BANERJEE v. NANI MOHAN BANERJEE, 36 C. 799=3 Ind. Cas. 995.

(4552)—O. 21, r. 1 (=s. 361, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Party to a suit—Death—Right to sue—Abatement.—By the terms of a consent decree it was provided that any right, title and interest which the plaintiff's grandmother, father and uncle had in certain family properties should be released and conveyed to defendant 1, their mortgagee: and a conveyance accordingly was passed in terms of the decree. The plaintiff, who was a minor then, was not made a party to the consent decree or the conveyance. He subsequently brought a suit to have his rights declared against defendant 1. While this suit was pending the plaintiff died leaving a widow and daughter. Defendant 1 contended that the suit abated by reason of plaintiff's death as plaintiff's right had passed to him:—Held, that the right to sue survived as it was an interest in property. DHARAMSI v. (4553)—O. 22, r. 1 (=s. 361, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Right to sue—Appeal—Death of Appallant—Action for libel—Legal representative.—The words "right to sue," in s. 361 of the Civ. Pro. Code, must be interpreted in their ordinary meaning, namely, the right to obtain relief by means of legal procedure. It does not follow that the right to appear against a decree partakes of the nature of the original decree. Plaintiff sued to recover damages on acoount of a libel: and obtained a decree for damages against defendant. Defendant paid the amount of the decree and filed an appeal in the High Court after which he died: his son was then brought on the record as his heir and legal representative. To this it was objected that at defendent's death, the appeal abated and his son had no right to continue the same. Held by Fulton & Crowe, JJ. (Candy, J., dissentient) that the appeal did not abate. Where the claim has been perfected by judgment the nature of the relief claimed on appeal stands on a different footing and there can be no abatement. GOPAL v. RAMCHANDRA, 4 Bom. (4554)—*O. 22, r. 1 (=s. 361, Civ Pro. Where a suit is one properly brought by a person as agent of an undisclosed principal, it should, after the death of the agent, be continued, if at all, by his representatives, and not by the principal. The principal's right to sue, when it exists independently of that of the agent and does not devolve upon him or revert to him as a consequence of the agent's death. PERIANNAN CHETTIAR v. The suit was dismissed both in the Court of first instance and in that of first appeal, and a second appeal was filed in the High Court. Pending second appeal S died, and his widow K was brought on record as his legal representative. Held, that the second appeal could not be prosecuted as regards the injunction against the legal representative K, and that it abated. If the appellant cannot prosecute his appeal for the injunction, he cannot be allowed to show that the decree refusing the injunction was wrong, for the mere

The fact that the decree was one for partition and that the appellants are the defendants, does not affect the applicability of s. 544. RAM SEWAK v. Code, 1882, ss. 361 365, 367, 523) — Reference to arbitration — Revocation of authority or arbitrator—Submission made rule of Court—Death of a party—Abatement.*—As regards the revocation of the authority of an arbitartor to whom the matter in a suit has been referred, the policy of the Indian Legislature has always been different from that in England, and the English Common Law Rule has not been followed. According to the law in India, the submission of an existing dispute once made is not, without just and sufficient cause, revocable even in the case of a submission which has not been made a rule of Court, while, with reference to a submission which has been made a rule of Court and consequently, where the matter has become the subject of a suit, the submission can be revoked only with the leave of the Court for good cause shown. (8 M H.C. 46, 12 M.I.A. 112, R.) Contracts to refer to arbitration should not be treated as standing upon the peculiar footing that such contracts are revocable at the mere will of a party so as to warrant the view that every such contract is essentially of a personal nature. The question whether a legal representative of deceased party is or is not entitled to enforce the contract to refer is a question which would depend upon whether the right dealt with in the reference is of a merely personal nature or is one which survives to the legal representative. So, where the submission has been made a rule of Court and the right is one which survives to the legal representative, the proceedings do not abate, under s. 361, Civ. Pro. Code, by reason of the death of a party. PERUMALLA SATYANARAYANA v. PERUMALLA VENKATA RANGAYYA, 27 M. 112. [F., 10 O.C. 132; R., 2 N.L.R. 7, 5 A.L.J. 658 =A.W.N. 1908, 228=30 A. 505.]

Code, 1882, s. 365)—Death of plaintiff—Substitution of plaintiff's representative—Trial of suit in part—Objection by defendant at late stage—Procedure.*—Pending a suit for money, the plaintiff died issueless and within two months and a half of his death, his widow as his legal representative, had her name entered on the record, and the trial of the suit proceeded for several days. Thereafter, defendants presented a petition under ss. 365 and 367, Civ. Pro. Code, stating that in the course of the trial it became evident that the deceased plaintiff had left an undivided brother, and praying for the determination of the question as to who was the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff. The District Munsiff, without making any elaborate inquiry, held that the widow was the proper heir and directed in order to prevent disputes, that the undivided brother who was willing to be joined as a party should be brought on the record along with the widow. He was accordingly made a co-plaintiff. Defendants preferred an appeal and the District Judge directed that an elaborate enquiry be held to determine who was the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff. On holding such an enquiry, the District Munsiff came to the conclusion that the undivided brother was the proper legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and struck off the widow's name from the record. He then passed judgment holding that the suit abated and passed a decree dismissing the suit. The widow preferred appeals both from the decree and from the order striking off her name from the record. The District Judge concurring with the District Munsiff dismissed both the appeals. Thereupon, the widow appealed to the High Court and presented a Civil Revision petition also against the order holding that she was not the legal representative. Held that as an appeal lay, the Civil Revision petition presented in the alternative was not necessary. Held, also that the right, if any, to take objections, accrued on the death of the plaintiff, and the defendants were bound to use all reasonable diligence in acquainting themselves with the state of the family of the deceased in view to ascertain whether the widow was entitled to prosecute the suit as the legal representative of her deceased husband, and they were bound to take the objection at the earliest opportunity, if they meant to insist upon their right, if any, to raise the objection. After having allowed the widow to proceed with the prosecution of the suit till it almost reached its conclusion, they were precluded from raising such objection at a late stage of the suit. As the widow had produced a succession certificate which presumably contained the plaint debt, her right to recover the debt was conclusive under s. 16 of the Succession Certificate Act. Code*, 1882, ss. 366, 368, 544)—Death of some of several appellants—Right of others to proceed with appeal not affected—Death of respondent during pendency of appeal—Procedure.—This suit for possession had been properly framed, and all the parties interested in the subject-matter were before the Court. Decree was passed against the defendants and it was open to any one of them to appeal against it, any plaintiff or defendant having a right to appeal without the concurrence of any of the other parties to the suit. The defendants appealed, but before the hearing of the appeal, one of the appellants and one of the respondents happened to die. Applications put in for having the names of their heirs entered as representative parties were rejected as time barred. The lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal on the ground that it was defective for want of parties, but the High Court held that that Court was wrong in having, under the circumstances, dismissed the appeal. The mere fact of the death of one of the several appellants cannot affect the right of the other appellants to proceed with the appeal. The proper course for the lower appellate Court would have been to have treated the appeal as having abated as regards the deceased appellant only. It should have proceeded with the hearing of the appeal so far as regards the remaining appellants. So far as the death of one of the respondents was concerned, the lower Court ought to have proceeded under the provisions of s. 368 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and to have either declared that the appeal had abated as to the deceased respondent and proceeded as against the rest of the respondents, under s. 544 of the Civ. Pro. Code, or else to have passed orders placing the legal representatives of the deceased respondent on the record. CHANDARSANG v. KHIMABHAI, 22 B. 718. [F., 26 B. 203=3 Bom. On the 6th June, 1882, the decree-holder purchased the property. On the 3rd July, the judgment-debtor filed objections to the confirmation of the sale, and two days after lodged an appeal against the order granting leave to bid. On the 9th August, the judgment-debtor died. On the 29th August, the Munsiff rejected the application as the legal representatives were not brought on record. On 14th October, the Judge disposed of the appeal-by dismissing it. On the 20th December, the sale of the 6th June was confirmed. The widow of the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court against all the three orders, dated the 29th August, the 14th October, and the 20th December. As regards the first appeal, the Court remarked that if, under s. 647 of the Code, s. 365 could be applied to execution proceedings and the judgment-debtor regarded as in the position of a deceased plaintiff, the Munsiff's order would be premature, as sixty days should be allowed from the date of the judgment-debtor's death, for his legal representative to apply to have his name entered in place of that of the deceased. As regards the second appeal, the Court held that the Judge should have held that the suit had abated, which would have still left the legal representative to apply under the second paragraph of s. 371 to set aside such abatement. The widow cannot, for the first time in the second appeal, apply to be substituted. As regards the third appeal also, it was held that she had no locus standi. DURGA KUAR v. One B N., brought a suit as karta of a joint Hindu family to recover possession of certain properties against a trespasser for the benefit of the whole family. During the pendency of the suit, B.N. died and his sons applied to be brought on record as legal representatives of the deceased. The defendant-trespasser opposed the application, on the ground that the sons of the deceased alone could not carry on the suit, as they could not be considered as legal representatives of B.N. as karta. The Court below held that the sons of B.N., were not the legal representatives of the deceased in his capacity as karta and ordered that the suit should be dismissed as having abated under s 366, Civ. Pro. Code. The sons of B.N. appealed against this order. It was contended that no appeal lay against an order passed under s. 366. Held that, although the order passed in the case by the Court below purported to have been passed under the first paragraph of s. 366, it ought to be treated as an order under s. 367. and was appealable under s. 588, cl. (18) (a). Held, further, that none of the sons of the deceased could claim to carry on the suit as karta, inasmuch as no member of a joint family could arrogate to himself the position of karta against the wishes of the other adult members. Held also that, if the other members of the family did not or could not join with the sons of the deceased B.N., in carrying on the suit, they were entitled to carry it on themselves for the benefit of the whole family, by making other members of the family parties to the suit. Their suit having been unsuccessful, the plaintiffs appealed, and during the pendency of the appeal one of the respondents died. After the lapse of more than six months the widow of the deceased respondent applied to the Court to have it declared that the appeal had abated. The appellants contested this application; but at the same time themselves asked that the widow might be brought on to the record if the Court thought it necessary that she should be a party. The proposition that substantial injury is the necessary result, to the true legal representative, of a sale of his propetry behind his back, is not universally true, and does not apply to a case, where a person, perfectly competent and prima facie anxious to protect the interests of the legal representative, was a party to the proceedings. Code, which provides in s.368, that unless, the plaintiff applies within the prescribed time to substitute the representatives of the deceased defendant, the suit shall abate. Not only there is then nothing in the Code to authorize the institution of a suit against a dead man as distinct from a suit against his legal representatives, but the death of the defendant puts an end to the suit, unless steps are taken, within a prescribed period, for bringing in the legal representative. Consequently, when a plaint is presented by a plaintiff for the purpose of instituting a suit against a defendant, in accordance with the provisions of the Code, and it afterwards turns out that the defendant had died before the presentation of the plaint, the Court has no jurisdiction to substitute the representatives of the deceased as defendants and allow the suit to proceed against them. As no application was made to bring in the legal representatives of the deceased respondent, the appeal was declared to have abated. Subsequently, the minors, through another guardian, applied that the order might be set aside and the appeal be restored to file and proceeded with. Held (per Davies, J.):—The abatement provided for in the penultimate clause of s. 368 is absolute. Further, the minor's claim to the benefit of s. 7 of the Limitation Act treating the present application as one under s. 368 of the Code could not be entertained, for there was no appeal pending, in which an application under s. 368, could be made. Besides, as there were others joined with the minors, who were not under disability at the time, s. 7 of the Limitation Act could not apply. Per Subrahamnia Aiyar, J.—The death of the respondent did not vest the right to have his representative made respondent in his stead severally in each of the appellants but vested jointly in all of them. The above contention of the appellants was overruled and it was held that s. 587 merely makes the provisions of s. 582, among others, applicable to second appeals and an application, in a second appeal, to bring in representatives of a respondent does not cease to be an application, under ss. 368 & 582, simply because it is an application that is authorised to be made under them by s. 587 and for the purposes of limitation such an application falls under art. 175 (e) and not under art. 178. Code, 1882)—Plaintiff—Legal representative of deceased plaintiff—Objection to the legal representative—Nearest heir to the deceased—Appeal—Practice—Procedure.*—M brought a suit on the 30th November, 1897 to recover certain property from defendants. Before, however, the written statement was filed, M died on the 27th February, 1899; and on the 5th June, 1899, B was brought on record, under s. 365 of the Civ. Pro. Code, as his legal representative; of this, the defendant had no notice or knowledge. On the 12th July, 1899, defendant objected that B should not be allowed to prosecute the suit in forma pauperis; but he did not object then to B's right to come on the record as his legal representative. The defendant put in his written statement on the 8th August, 1899, wherein for the first time, he disputed B's right to represent M. The case was adjourned to the 16th August, 1899, for raising issues: on that day, the issues in the case were raised, the first of which related to B's right to represent M in the suit. Evidence was then gone into on all the issues. The Court of first instance found the first issue in B's favour and on merits decreed the suit in favour of B. On appeal, the lower appellate Court went into the question as to the representative character of B and rejected the suit on finding that B did not hold that character. B applied to the High Court: Held, by Chandavarkar and Batty, JJ. (Aston, J., dissenting) that the lower appellate Court committed an error in law in reversing the decree passed by the Court of first instance and in dismissing the suit on the sole ground that B was not the legal representative of M. Per Chandavarkar, J.—The Court of first instance, in deciding the issue about B's right to represent M, must be taken to have acted under s. 367 of the Civ. Pro. Code: and the circumstance that the Subordinate Judge did not decide the question, is only an error of procedure. So far as the Subordinate Judge decided the issue under s. 367 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the decision was an order appealable only under s. 588 (18) of the Code. The defendant cannot be allowed to question the validity of the order, passed under s. 367 of the Civ. Pro. Code, in an appeal which he preferred in the lower appellate Court against the whole case. When a plaintiff dies, the suit cannot proceed because there is none suing. The legislature provides that his legal representative can come in his place; when he is allowed to come the defect is made up; there is a suit to proceed. The suit is then a suit on the merits. A Court has no jusrisdiction after that stage has been reached to go back and enquire into the right of the legal representative to proceed with the suit side by side with an enquiry into the merits. Per Batty, J.—The dismissal of a suit solely on the ground of a doubt as to the heirship of a person whose only claim is to proceed with it as the representative of a deceased plaintiff is an error in law and unsustainable. Where the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff applies to have his name substituted, the Court must enter his name under s. 365 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and proceed with the suit. If no application be made within the prescribed period, there are two courses open; viz, either (1) to pass an order that suit shall abate, or on defendant applying in this behalf; (2) to pass an order for bringing in the legal representative and proceeding with the suit. If the suit abates, s. 371 may thereafter come into operation, but the suit is not liable to dismissal. If any dispute arise as to who is a legal representative, s. 367 applies And when such a dispute does arise, it is not the province of the Court to decide who is the rightful heir, or to reject the suit altogether on failure by the person claiming to be representative, to establish affirmatively his right as heir. The Court has again two courses open—viz., either to stay the suit until the fact has been determined in another suit, or to decide at or before the hearing of the suit, not whether the person claiming is the heir, but only as to "who shall be admitted to be such legal representative for the purpose of prosecuting the suit" No decision is required or can be passed in such a case on the right of heirship; nor can the suit be dismissed on the ground that such right of heirship has not been established against all possible comers. A decision on that point would not be binding if passed in such a case, even between the rival claimants, and all that is needed and all that can be done in the suit is to decide who shall proceed with it, without in any way affecting the ultimate liability or right of the persons in favour of whom or against whom the order is passed. Per Aston, J.—It was vital to the success of the suit prosecuted by B that B should be adjudicated the nearest heir of M. Where a person has once been admitted to the record as legal representative of a deceased plaintiff that person is a party, and any dispute raised inter partes as to that substituted plaintiff's right of representation (not inheritance) so as to have such substituted plaintiff struck out comes properly under s. 32 and not under s. 367 of the Civ. Pro. Code. If s. 367 be read with s. 588 (18) of the Civ. Pro. Code it becomes clear that the dispute contemplated in s. 367 is not an issue on the merits framed and recorded between a plaintiff and defendant. BALABAI v. GANESH, 4 Bom. L.R. 980=27 B. 162.

In such cases, the person who claims himself to be the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff must substantiate his claim, and the Court should proceed under s. 367, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, either to stay the suit until the question as to who was the legal representative of the deceased is decided in another suit instituted for the purpose, or should itself decide the question. A plaintiff appellant having died during the pendency of the appeal, and two persons having separately applied to be substituted as the deceased's representatives, the Court substituted one of them, and eventually decided the appeal against him. (4636)—O. 22, r. 6 — Death of plaintiff—Case adjoured for arguments — Arguments heard without plaintiff's heirs as parties—Decree passed therein is a nullity.—After evidence on both sides in a case was adduced, the case was adjourned for hearing arguments. Between these two dates, the plaintiff died. The arguments in the case, however, were heard without making the heirs of the plaintiff parties to the suit, and the suit proceeded to judgment and decree. The defendant appealed against the decree but the appeal was subsequently withdrawn. When the decree was sought to be executed against him, the defendant contended that the decree was a nulity and therefore incapabe of execution. Held, that the decree was passed without jurisdiction, and, therefore, a nullity, that the withdrawal of appeal by defendant did not in any way validate the decree. R died in the morning of the day when the suit was posted for hearing. The suit was taken up, heard and disposed of that day after R's death. R's legal representative, alleging that the decree passed after R's death was a nullity and could not operate as a bar to a subsequent suit, now sued the legal representative of the defendant in the prior suit, on the same cause of action and for the same relief. Held, that the suit abated on the death of the plaintiff, and that, after the abatement of a suit, it is not open to his representative to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. They also apply to a case wherein, pending a suit instituted by the manager of an encumbered estate, the estate is released and restored to the owner, by reason of his attaining majority. The addition of such an assignee's name on to the record cannot be taken as authorized by s. 372 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Although, under certain circumstances, the term 'suit' includes not only the proceedings in the first Court, but the proceedings in the appeal and up to final execution, it is doubtful whether the words "pending the suit" in s. 372 can be construed to mean at any time from the commencement of the suit until its final determination on appeal, if there be one. Code, to make a person a party to a suit on whom an interest in the subject-matter of the suit has devolved pending the suit otherwise than by death, marriage, bankruptcy or insolvency. The same power is conferred by s. 582 of the Code on an appellate Court in respect of appeals. The last portion of the first paragraph of that section which is confined to "proceedings arising out of death, marriage or insolvency of parties to an appeal," does not limit the scope of the first portion of that paragraph, and render the provisions of s. 372 inapplicable to appeals. Moreover, a person may, under s. 372, be added or substituted as a party, as well on his own application as on the application of one of the parties to the record, because, where a devolution of interest has taken place pending a suit or appeal, it would be prejudicial to the person on whom such interest has devolved or to some of the parties to the suit if he could not be brought on the record otherwise than on the application of the plaintiff or the appellant as the case may be. So, where the official receiver that represented a respondent and continued to have interest in the subject-matter of the appeal obtained an order for his dismissal from the array of parties, on misrepresenting certain facts, it was held to be competent to the Court to set aside such order of dismissal, on application made by the respondent, treating his application as one made for review of judgment. In the matter of the petition of SARAT CHANDRA SINGH, 18 A. 285=A.W.N. 1896, 45, [F., 22 A. 231=A.W.N. 1900, 279.]

The plaintiff preferred an appeal, but, before the appeal was admitted, he applied, under O. 23, Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, for leave to withdraw the suit and bring a fresh suit. The application was heard and granted by the District Judge without giving notice to the defendant. On appeal by the defendant: Held (1) that the duty of the District Judge, upon the presentation of the appeal, was either to dismiss the appeal without sending notice to the respondent or to adjourn the hearing, and, if the appellant did not appear, to dismiss the appeal; (2) that there was no provision allowing the District Judge to entertain an application, the effect of which was to get rid of the decree of the lower Court without any notice to the decree-holder and without any hearing of the appeal; (3) that the course taken by the District Judge was not sanctioned by the provisions of O. 23, which contemplated the pendency of the suit and which did not apply where the suit had been disposed of and a decree passed in favour of the defendant. Where a plaintiff wishes to withdraw from a part of his claim, with liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of it, he must either proceed with the remaining part of claim, or if he does not, the suit must be dismissed as to it. There is nothing in s. 373 of the Code empowering the Court to permit the withdrawal of the whole of a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of a part of it only. If such a withdrawal is permitted the order of the Court in respect of the portion withdrawn without leave given to bring a fresh suit must take effect otherwise than as an order of withdrawal, which under s. 373, simply precludes a plaintiff from suing again in respect of the claim. progress of a suit—Law applicable to the suit—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879,) ss. 12, 13.—Early in 1905, a redemption suit was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Thana. The Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act was extended to the District in August 1905. At the trial, the Subordinate Judge took the accounts of the mortgage upon the footing of the application of ss. 12 and 13 of the Act and gave the plaintiff the benefit of those provisions. There was an appeal: and whilst it was pending, the case of Fatmabibi v. Ganesh, 9 Bom. L R. 971 was decoided. The plaintiff then seeing that by reason of the above ruling the defendant's appeal was likely to succeed, applied to the Court for leave under s.373 of the Code of Civil Procedure to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit upon the same cause of action, in order that he might in the fresh suit obtain the benefit of ss. 12 and 13 of the Act. This was allowed. Held, that the Judge in permitting the plaintiff in the stage of appeal to withdraw the suit with liberty to file a fresh suit under s. 373 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and thus get the benefit of an alteration in the substantive law, acted without jurisdiction. Held, that the suit should have been tried upon the footing that the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act had no application between the parties. PRABHAKAR v. KHANDERAO, 10 Bom. L.R. 625.

(4693)—O. 23, r. 1 (=s. 373, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Withdrawal of suit—Liberty to file fresh suit—Permission of the Courts—Costs.—S. 373 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, contemplates a withdrawal not of the suit but from the suit, and such a withdrawal may be either with or without liberty to bring a fresh suit. If a party desires to withdraw from the suit with such liberty, then he must apply to the Court to permit him so to withdraw. If the does not desire to have that liberty, then he can withdraw of his own motion and no order of the Court is necessary. Hence, where a plaintiff applies to the Court for permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and the Court is not minded to give the liberty, the proper order to pass is that the application for permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the subject-matter of the suit be dismissed with costs. It is not competent to the Court to order on such application that the suit may be withdrawn and the plaintiff to bear all costs and to pay all costs. MAHANT BIHARIDASJI v. If, however, the second suit is not for the "same matter" as involved in the first suit but, in reality, one to enforce the terms of the compromise in the first suit—e.g., for possession in accordance with the compromise entered into therein—and the matter involved in the first suit is merely introduced as a subsidiary matter, such second suit will not be barred by s. 373. Meanwhile the executing Court refused to confirm the sale. Thereupon the plaintiff withdrew her suit without permission, which was struck off the file. But the sale was then upheld in appeal. Then she brought a second suit. Held that this suit was not barred as a fresh cause of action different from that which formed the basis of the first suit had accrued to her by the appellate Court upholding the sale. Pro. Code, 1882, may be given at any time while, and by any Court, whether original or appellate, in which the litigation is pending. Held, that, so far as this section is concerned, the active power of the Court is limited, except as to costs, to those cases where the plaintiff asks for permission to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit (9 C.P.L.R. 3, 17 A. 156, F.), and that leave to withdraw without liberty given to sue again is not a form of order contemplated by s. 373, Civ. Pro. Code. (9 C.L R 332, Diss.) There is no power on earth vested in Courts which can prevent a sole plaintiff, or one of several co-plaintiffs, from abandoning his claim, or part thereof, by a declaration that he withdraws it, or in any other of the several different ways open to him. Object of s. 373 discussed. Held, that the section must be strictly construed and that the words "sufficient grounds" in cl. Unconditional withdrawal of suit, which is optional with the plaintiff, may result in the subject-matter of the suit becoming again res judicata. (6 M. 43, 15 B. 370, 16 B. 243, R.) Such unconditional withdrawal of an appeal deprives the appellate Court of its seisin over the decree in appeal, and the matters decided by that decree cease to be sub judice. Code, 1882)—Permission to institute fresh suit—Plaint returning of, for presentation to proper Court—Suit, frame of—Jurisdiction of Revenue and Civil Courts—Appeal.*—The plaintiff brought a suit for possession of a village on the allegation that the husband of the defendant was the thekadar of the village; that on his death in 1896 he (the plaintiff) took possession of the village, but the defendant recovered possession of it by order of the Revenue Court, and that she had no sort of proprietary or under-proprietary right in it. The defendant pleaded that her husband was in possession of the vilage of gasaradar and that she was not liable to ejectment. The first Court held that the defendant could not be ejected as she held the land at a favourable rate of rent and that the plaintiff could only take proceedings under s. 52, Oudh Rent Act. On appeal the lower appellate Court held that on the allegations of the plaintiff the defendant did not become a trespasser on the death of her husband but was a tenant of the land and so could only be ejected by the Revenue Court. The plaintiff then appealed to the Judicial Commissioner and, when his appeal came on for hearing, asked the Court to dismiss the appeal and the suit with permission under s. 373, Civ. Pro, Code, to bring a fresh suit, or to return the plaint for presentation to a Revenue Court. Held, that permission could not be granted to the plaintiff under s. 373, Civ Pro. Code, to bring a fresh suit. Held further, that the suit as framed was cognizable neither by the revenue nor by the Civil Court and the plaintiff therefore could not be allowed to withdraw it from filing it in a revenue Court. pending suit—Revocation of reference—Power to permit withdrawal, with liberty to bring fresh suit.—The plaintiff had, previously during the pendency of a suit between him and the defendants in respect of the same matter, applied for and obtained an order of reference under s. 506 of the Code. However before the expiry of the time fixed for the making of an award, he made an ex parte application under s. 373, for permission to withdraw from the suit, with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The application was granted and the suit struck off. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit. Held, that the Court had no power to revoke the reference, except in the events referred to in s. 510. If the Court had no such power, either it had no power to act under s. 373, if the effect of such section was a revocation of the order of reference, or, if the permission to withdraw did not involve such revocation, then the order to refer was still in force: so that the Court's order was either ultra vires or else inoperative as a revocation. (4731)—O. 23, r. 1, s. 141 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 373, 647), whether applicable to applications for execution.—By a mere fact of a decree-holder having withdrawn his first application for execution, without leave given by the Court to renew it, he is not precluded under s. 373, Civ. Pro. Code, from filing his second application. The section can have no application in the case of petitions for execution, by the effect of s. 647 of the Code. The proceedings spoken of in the latter section included original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships, and so forth, and do not include executions. Both in the Civ. Pro. Code, and in the Limitation Act, the Legislature contemplates the legality of a succession of applications for execution. The principle of s. 373 cannot be applied to execution proceedings so as to place a decree-holder, who is not desirous of proceeding with his application for execution, in the same position as a plaintiff desiring to withdraw from his suit. (13 M.I.A. 160, F.) S. 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply except to cases where the suit is properly pending in a Court in which the leave was granted. A plaint was filed well within the period of limitation. But, the leave to institute it under cl. 12 of the Charter was obtained from the Registrar. Under the practice laid down by the Court, it was by leave withdrawn, and on the same cause, a fresh suit, with proper leave, was then and there instituted but on a date when, under the usual circumstances, the suit would be barred by limitation. Held—that the leave to withdraw was not granted under s. 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that therefore, s. 374 of the Code could not operate as a bar to the fresh suit and that, under s. 14 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), it was not barred by limitation. (2) of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1908, mean that the ground must be one ejusdem generis with the formal defect referred to in sub-clause (a). Mere inability of a party to prove his case is not sufficient ground for permitting him to withdraw it with leave to institute a fresh suit. Plaintiff, in a suit for rent, applied for leave to withdraw her case, with liberty to bring a fresh suit, on the ground that her witnesses were won over by the other side and that she was unable to prove her claim. The Court being already seized of the suit which is adjusted, the application to record the alleged agreement is necessarily a proceeding in that suit; and the Court, in connexion with that proceeding, necessarily has all the powers and has thrown upon it all the duties which appertain to it in regard to any other questions arising in any suit upon its file. The parties came to terms and filed a razinama in Court by which it was agreed that the plaintiffs were to pay certain amount within one week and take possession of the mortgaged property. Upon this, the Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of the land in accordance with the compromise. Held, that the compromise and the decree passed in accordance therewith were not limited, and did not relate to the subject-matter of the suit, which was merely for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to have the mortgage of the land by their father declared void and ineffectual, so far as their rights of succession were concerned, and not for the possession of the land. Held, that, therefore, the decree did not "relate to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as was dealt with by the compromise," and was not final within the purview of s. 375, and that an appeal, therefore, lay from that decree (18 M. 410 ; F., 5 C.W.N. 4, D.) Held, that the proper course for the lower Court to adopt, in the circumstances, was to inform the parties that the terms of the compromise could not be embodied in a decree and if it appeared that the compromise was arrived at conditionally upon its being incorporated in the decree to proceed with the suit. The agreement or compromise itself, that is made out of Court may be in writing or by word of mouth. If the Court did not record the terms of it, s. 91, Evidence Act, is no bar to a suit being brought on the terms of the compromise. Moreover, s. 375 only allows the decree to be final, so far as relates to the subject-matter of the suit. So, when an agreement or compromise is made in a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, the Court's decree under s. 375 does not bar any person from suing to establish his title to property and recover possession thereof. Code, 1882, s. 375)—Suit by trustee—Decree in favour of trustee—Compromise giving up rights acquired by decree—Agreement opposed to purpose and usage of institution—Liability of agreement application to record—Agreement and pass decree in pursuance thereof—Permissibility.*—It is not in the power of a trustee to ignore and alter the fundamental character and uses of a religious institution as ascertained by judicial authority. Where an institution exists for the purpose of religious worship, but the exact form of worship or the class for whose benefit it was established cannot be discovered from the instrument creating the trust, (or where there is no such instrument) the Court can find no other means of deciding those questions than through the medium of inquiry into what has been the usage of the worshippers in respect thereto, and if, the usage is a lawful one, it is the duty of the Court to support that usage on the suit, legally instituted of any person interested. It is not in the power of individuals having the management of the institution to alter the purpose for which it was founded or to say to the other worshippers that they (the managers) had changed their opinions in regard to the institution and that those worshippers should conform themselves to those changed opinions. It is the duty of a trustee to maintain the customary usage of the institution, and if he fails to do so, he is guilty of a breach of trust and still more so, if he deliberately attempts to effect a vital change of usage and to make it binding on the worshippers by obtaining a decree of the Court to establish it. The trustee of a temple instituted a suit for a declaration that the defendant community was not entitled to enter the temple, and for an injunction and damages. The plaintiff obtained a decree in his favour in the first Court. During the pendency of an appeal by the defendants, the plaintiff entered into a compromise giving up all that he got by the decree of the first Court. Thereupon, the gurukkal of the temple and some other worshippers applied for and were made parties to the proceedings as supplemental plaintiffs. The trustee-plaintiff withdrew from the compromise, and the supplemental plaintiffs opposed the application for the agreement being recorded and a decree passed in terms thereof. Held that, having regard to the finding that by custom and the shastras the defendants were prohibited from entering the plaint temple and that their entry into the temple necessitated purificatory ceremonies, the propose compromise was essentially a breach of trust on the part of the first plaintiff and was not a bona fide transaction. The Court passed a decree in terms of the compromise. Subsequently, the defendants questioned the validity of the charge on the ground that the plaintiff prayed only for a money decree in the plaint, without claiming any charge and that it was, therefore, not competent to the Court to give a decree creating a charge, even though they agreed to such a charge. Held, there was nothing in principle or in the language of s. 375 of the Code to preclude the Court from embodying in the decree the charge which the parties agreed to as security for the debt or to restrict the relief to be granted in accordance with the compromise to what is prayed for in the plaint or less. The plaintiffs, in the present suit, were the sons of the natural son of the owner, who made the adoption; and defendant No. 1, the son of the adopted son. The adopted son pre deceased the adoptor and, after the death of the latter, defendant No. 1, got his name registered in the Collectorate in respect of an eight annas share in certain Zemindaries left by the adoptive father of his father. Thereupon, the natural son of the owner brought several suits to recover, from the present defendant No. 1, the share of the Zemindaries, which he got registered in his name on the ground that the adoption was neither true in fact nor valid in law. The parties to these suits, however entered into a compromise and, in pursuance of the compromise, the present defendant No. 1 got possession of certain properties. The present first plaintiff was a minor during the pendency of the previous suits and second plaintiff was not born then. The present suit was for a declaration that the compromise effected by their father was not binding on plaintiffs and to eject defendants from the plaint properties and place them and their father in joint possession of the same. The petition of the compromise dealt also with properties not the subject of the previous suits. Held, the second plaintiff, not having been born at the time of the compromise, could not impeach it. So far as the first plaintiff was concerned, the first question for consideration was whether defendant No. 1, the natural son of an adopted son, was entitled to any share when there was a natural son to the adoptor. According to Hindu Law, an adopted son occupies the same position and has the same rights and privileges in the family of the adoptor, as the legitimate son, except in a few specified instances. An absolute adoption operates as birth of the boy in the family of adoption and as civil death in the family of birth. An adopted son, by the very fact of his adoption, acquires a vested interest in the ancestral property of his adoptive father; he does not become divested of such interest, though its extent may be altered, by the subsequent birth of a legitimate son of his adoptor, and the grandson by the adopted son acquires by birth a right in his grand father's estate, which entitles him to share in such property though his father be dead, along with the legitimate son of his grand father. And the share which an adopted son gets is a fifth of the entire property and a fourth of the natural son's share. (17 B. 100, 1 M.H.C. 45, R. & F.; (4 C. 425, Exp. & Diss.). Consequently, defendant No. 1 was entitled to a fifth of the whole property left by the adoptor. The next question was, whether the compromise was beneficial to the present plaintiffs. There is a considerable conflict of opinion as to whether the share to be allotted to the adopted son on partition is not more than one fifth. And the compromise, under the circumstances, was settled on terms most favourable to the present plaintiffs. Though the present first plaintiff was not a party to those suits, as the compromise was executed by the Karta of the family and as he was not prejudiced thereby, it was binding on him. (14 M.I.A. 367, 1 A. 651, 16 A. 231, 1 B.H.C. App. 51, R.) There was no proof that the compromise was the result of mistake, inequality of position, undue influence, coercion or fraud such as would be sufficient in law to vitiate it. Mere inequality of benefit could not afford sufficient ground for vitiating it. (2 M.I.A. 181, 7 M.I.A. 311, 14 M.I.A. 24, 8 C. 138, 22 B. 482, R.) [R., 4 C.L.J. 323.] But that portion of the compromise, which dealt with properties not the subject of the previous suits, could not be enforced, since the petition of compromise was not registered as required by s. 17 of the Registration Act. (30 C. 783, 26 I.A. 101=22 M. 508, R., 25 I.A. 9=20 A. 171, Expl. & D.) In the result, the plaintiffs were given a decree in respect of four-fifth of the plaint properties, which were not the subject-matter of the previous suits and, as regards properties comprised in the previous suits, the compromise-decree was held binding. Some evidence in the case was then recorded and the case was adjourned to a future date for the hearing. On the date fixed for the hearing, one of the parties, the plaintiff, stated before the Court that he had settled the points of difference and he agreed to the interpretation put upon the clause by the defendant. The Court, thereupon, passed a decree based on that compromise. Held, on appeal, that there being no agreement between the parties as to the interpretation of the compromise when it was originally filed, there had been no real and genuine adjustment of the case before the Court and in fact no final compromise between the parties upon which the Court could proceed to decide the case. If the Court wished to act upon the compromise according to the amendment originally suggested by the defendant and subsequently agreed to by the plaintiff, a fresh compromise amending those terms should have been put in and verified by all the parties concerned. Held, further, that there being no decree passed in the case within the meaning of s. 375, Civ. Pro. Code, inasmuch as there had been no real agreement between the parties, the decree so passed was open to appeal and could not be considered as final. RAM LAL v. BALAK RAM, 9 O C 365. No order of reference was however made by the Court. The question was whether the award made by the arbitrators could be given effect to. Held that, assuming that the award was but the completion of the agreement of the parties, and that such agreement plus the award affected the rights of the parties in the pending suit, it could only be an agreement adjusting the suit, and as such could be recorded and acted upon under s. 375, Civ. Pro. Code, provided it was a lawful agreement. But the agreement was not lawful inasmuch as the submission related to the rights not only of the adult parties but of minors also. Leave of the Court was not obtained under s. 462, Civ. Pro. Code, either before the submission to arbitration of after the award, and the adjustment was therefore not binding on the minors, The effect of the submission was to take away from the Court the power of adjudicating upon the rights of the minors, and to leave such adjudication to a private tribunal. Such an agreement was one clearly falling within s. 462 of the Code. Held also that a partial adjudication being impossible in a partition suit, the adjustment could not bind even the parties thereto who were not minors. In the course of the suit, the plaintiff and the defendant by a submission paper referred "all matters in difference in the suit" to the decision of two arbitrators, who after some inquiry passed an award directing the defendant to pay plaintiff the sum of Rs. 6,000, and that the account of the plaintiff in the defendant's books should be cancelled. On an application by the plaintiff to the Court that the submission and award should be filed as an agreement adjusting the suit under s. 375 of the Civ. Pro. Where in the case mentioned above the arbitrators also decided the plaintiff's claim to two ornaments said to be in the possession of the defendant which was not referred to them by the submission paper, but which was said to have been verbally referred to them during the course of the arbitration, held on the same application that the Court could not make any order as to this portion of the award which dealt with a matter not relating to the subject-matter of the suit, and ordered that a separate application should be made with regard to the ornaments. Code, 1882)—Commission to examine witnesses—Discretion of Court—Power of Court to exempt personal appearance to give evidence—Power of Court to refuse summons—Abuse of legal process—Letters Patent, s. 15.*—The head of a Mutt, a party to a suit, was cited as a witness in certain execution-proceedings in the suit. The witness having unsuccessfully applied to the Sub-Judge, who issued the summons, to be examined on Commission, preferred an appeal to the High Court. A single Judge of the High Court heard the appeal and allowed it, and ordered the witness to be examined on commission. Against this decision, an appeal was preferred, under s. 15 of the Letters Patent, by the unsuccessful party. It was contended, for the appellant, (1) that the High Court had no power to set aside an order refusing the issue of a commission ; (2) that s. 383 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not authorise the issue of a commission under the circumstances of the case ; and (3) that the Sub-Judge had no discretion to refuse summons ; the respondent contended that no appeal lay, under the Letters Patent, against the order of the single Judge of the High Court. Held, that the High Court had the power, under the Charter Act, to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, as one made without the proper exercise of his judicial discretion ; that a Court has no power to issue a Commission except in cases enumerated in s. 383 and that no power is given by the Civ. Pro. Code, to a Court to exempt any person from appearance in Court ; (7 W.R. 349, R.) ; the Courts have not the absolute discretion or inherent power to issue a commission, except when authorised by the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code ; nor is the Court bound to issue a Commission when all the conditions laid down in s. 383 exist ; where such examination may result in manifest injustice to any party or where it is not calculated to permit of the evidence being tested fairly, or where the application is made to avoid cross examination before the Court, a commission need not be issued ; though every Court is bound to issue a summons to a witness, every Court has an undoubted right to prevent the abuse of its process, and, when such an abuse is likely to occur, it may refuse a summons; that, in this case, it having appeared that the summons was applied for, not bona fide, but in order to harass the witness and attempt to gain an undue advantage over the witness, who was a party to the suit, the lower Court (the single Judge of the High Court) was right in refusing the summons on the ground that it would result in an abuse of process; and that the appeal lay under the Letters Patent ; the order of the single Judge was a judgment, because it was an adjudication on the undoubted right of a litigant to the suit to insist on the appearance of a witness in Court. A commission is to issue for the purpose of local investigation only when such investigation cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person. When a Judge makes a local investigation, he should put the result on record, so that the parties may see what he considers established. A Judge should not hold a local investigation with a view to gather information which he might use as the foundation of his judgment. He might inspect the locality with a view to enable him to understand the evidence. But if any additional information was required, the proper course would be to appoint a Commissioner under s. 392 of the Code, whose report might be used in evidence and who might be examined as a witness. (4852)—O. 26, r. 11 (=*Civ. Pro. Then the Court fixes another day, if that course be necessary, to ascertain if the accounts filed by the defendant are correct, and to do this the Court allows the defendant to make out, if he can, by papers, bills, books and witnesses, that each item to which the plaintiff objects is correct, and also allowing the plaintiff, if he can, to show that each item entered is not correct, or that items are omitted which ought to have been shown, or that the evidence which the defendant produces in support of the items objected to is not sufficient to justify the Court in accepting that item, or these items, as correct. The Court then goes through the account item by item, and finally arrives at the amount which, on the evidence, appears to be due by the defendant to the plaintiff. And if the plaintiff has asked, as he might and should ask, for a decree for the amount so found due, the Court proceeds to decree that amount. Pro. Code, to examine the accounts and objections to the same and it was further ordered that the vakil should submit to the Court his report on the said accounts and objections. Held, that the object of the order was to refer to the Commissioner the examination of the accounts for the purpose of enabling the Court to see what the accounts were, and the duty of the Commissioner was to make out an account, showing to the Court exactly what the account, in the books stood and nothing else. The business of the Commissioner was practically to place himself in the position of an assistant to the Court, so as to give the Court all the information which the accounts gave and thus to enable the the Court to come to a decision. Held, further, that, under s. 398 of the Code, the Commissioner is entitled to take evidence in the matter referred to, so as to be able to report to the Court for the purpose of enabling it to give a judgment on the points at issue. The Commissioner cannot deal with the case as if he is the Judge or an arbitrator appointed by the parties. But where the enactment deals with procedure only, unless the contrary is expresseed, the enactment applies to all actions whether commenced before or after the passing of the Act. The plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree on the 15th November, 1904. An application to execute the decree was made on the 3rd September, 1909; and notice under O. XXI, r. 22 of the Code of 1908, was served on the defendant on the 14th September, 1909. On the 20th September, 1909, the defendant obtained a rule against the plaintiff to show cause why the ex parte decree should not be set aside. The plaintiff contended that the defendant had knowledge of the decree before the 14th September, 1909, and that his application was barred under art. 164 of the Limitation Act of 1908. The defendant, in contending that the application was governed by art. 164 of the Limitation Act of 1877, relied on s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. Held, overruling the defendant's contention, that the remedy in respect of the liability involved in the ex parte decree was given by the Civ. XXX, r. 10 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1908. There is nothing in that rule which says anything about residence either in or without the jurisdiction of the High Court, and it has not the effect of curtailing the powers which the High Court derives from cl. 12 of the Charter, under which it has jurisdiction over persons who carry on business within its local limits. A contract was signed by the manager of the defendant's business in Calcutta, the defendant himself being a resident of Singapore. The defendant is sued in his firm's name for damages for breach of the contract in the Original Side of the High Court: Held, that the suit was maintainable in the form in which it has been brought, and the High Court has jurisdiction to try it. The defendant by a power-of-attorney empowered his manager to contract, superintend and carry on the business of general merchants as now carried on by the defendant in Singapore. The manager entered into forward contracts with the plaintiff in respect of sugar, and there is evidence that the defendant's firm was accustomed in Calcutta to enter into forward contracts in the sugar trade: Held, that the manager had authority to enter into the contract sued upon and that the defendant was liable. By the contract the defendant purchased 750 tons of sugar, the delivery of which was to be made in five equal shipments in August, September, October, November, and December 1910. Notice was given of the arrival of the August shipment amounting to 150 tons. The defendant took delivery of 25 tons but failed to take delivery of the balance which was re-sold by the plaintiff at a loss, and he now sued to recover the loss: Held, that as no goods had been appropriated to the fulfilment of the contract, the plaintiff had no right to re-sell and charge the defendant for the difference between the contract price and the price at which he sold the balance of the sugar, but that the measure of damages

The trustee of a temple instituted a suit for a declaration that the defendant community was not entitled to enter the temple, and obtained a decree in his favour in the first Court. On the 2nd of May, the defendants' solicitors gave notice to the solicitors of the plaintiff that the plaintiff was a minor suing without a next friend and the plaint must be struck off the file in consequence. The plaintiff's solicitor replied that, if the plaintiff was really a minor, he would take steps to have her father appointed her next friend and the plaint and proceedings amended accordingly. On the 7th of May, inspection was given to the plaintiff's solicitor of the plaintiff's horoscope, and after that inspection the plaintiff's solicitor proposed that the plaint and proceedings should be amended by the insertion of the name of the plaintiff's father as her next friend. Nothing was done by either party or sometime afterwards, and on the 6th June, the defendants' attorneys gave notice to the plaintiffs of an application for an order that the plaint should be taken off the file under s. 442 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The plaintiff likewise applied to be allowed to amend the proceedings by the insertion of the name of her father as her next friend. Held that, the suit not being a vexatious one, and the father of the plaintiff not having fraudulently concealed her age and having stated on oath that he bona fide believed her to be of age and being willing to be placed on the record as her next friend, the plaint could not be struck off the file. Held also that the Courts both in India and England, as a rule, only strike the plaint off the file the where it appears, on the face of the plaint, that it was filed by a person who was a minor, or when it is proved that it was filed with the knowledge that the plaintiff was a minor, and with the intention of deceiving the Court and evading the payment of costs in case the plaintiff fails in the claim. Where the fact of minority is a bona fide question of evidence and the defendant's allegation is found correct, then, the usual course is to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor to have himself properly represented in the suit by a next friend. The guardian ad litem of the minor defendants signed the petition of compromise and agreed to present it in Court at the next hearing of the suit. Leave of the Court was not obtained under s. 462, Civ. Pro. Code. On the appointed day, the guardian declined to present the petition. On the plaintiff seeking to enforce the compromise, the guardian objected to a decree being passed in terms thereof. Held, that as leave to enter into the compromise was never asked for on behalf of the minor defendants, and in the face of the opposition on the part of the person representing the minor defendants in the litigation, the Court had clearly no power to enforce the compromise, even though it appeared that the terms of the compromise were beneficial to the minors. The guardian ad litem of minor defendants, who was their mother, compromised the suit on their behalf without obtaining sanction of the Court. In execution proceedings, another compromise was made and sanction of Court was not obtained. Houses belonging to the minors were sold in execution of decree, and the auction-purchasers sold them to a certain person who sold one of them to another person. The transferees acted in good faith. The plaintiffs, minors, brought the present suit for recovery of the houses, on the ground that the compromise was not valid and the decree was a nullity and incapable of execution. The Court granted a decree on the ground that, sanction of the Court not having been obtained, the plaintiffs were not bound by the decree. Held, that want of such sanction only rendered the decree voidable at the instance of the minors, but they could only avoid it in case of its being found that their interests were perjudiced by the compromise. The Chief Court remanded the case for re-decision after enquiry into the issue as to whether the compromise was nor for the benefit of the minors. The burden of proof was placed on the plaintiffs, as they sought relief from the Courts, and it was for them to show that in equity they were entitled to relief, and because prima facie there was no reason to suppose that the mother was in collusion with the former plaintiff, or had any reason to admit a claim which was not really due or in any way to act prejudicially to her son's interests. This suit was settled by a compromise agreed to by the minor's father on his behalf. The compromise was also duly sanctioned by the Court. Under this compromise the appellant got a decree for a portion of the property and the remainder of his claim was dismissed. The appellant, on attaining majority, instituted the present suit asking that a decree be passed cancelling the compromise and the decree based thereon, that the parties be relegated to the position which they held before the compromise was filed and that the appellant be authorized to finish his case from the stage at which the compromise had been filed. The appellant urged in support of his claim that his previous case was so strong that he was sure to win it and the actual reason why the appellant's father entered into the compromise was that the elder brother of the appellant was to be adopted by the respondent's mother and that as this fact was concealed from the Court, when it gave its sanction to the compromise, the decree and the compromise were of no avail: Held, that the compromise was duly sanctioned by the Court and a decree passed thereon and that consequently it could not be set aside. Held, further, that the appellant could not now ask the Court to look at the record of the previous case to determine whether it was a strong or a weak one. The Court sanctioning the compromise had considered the point in dispute between the parties and had granted leave for the compromise after the exercise of its judicial discretion. No facts in connection with the property in dispute between the parties were withheld from the Court. The Court knew exactly what the plaintiff claimed and what the defendant claimed, and after having considered all the facts relating to the property in dispute and after following the provisions of law came to the conclusion that the compromise was a fair one. The Court cannot now go into the facts of the previous case and determine whether sanction had been properly granted or

Code, no exception is made in the case of a certificated guardian; on the other hand he is expressly referred to in s. 440. So, s. 462, Civ. Pro. Code, applies also to the case of a certificated guardian. S. 462, Civ. Pro. Code, does not refer only to agreements out of Court but it also includes a compromise finally determining the suit. The policy of the law is to protect minors from being taken at a disadvantage by their guardians, and a minor's interests would generally be quite as much imperilled by the final decree as by an agreement at some earlier stage of the suit. (3 M. 103, 13 B. 137, Rel. on.) The fact that the Court passes a decree in terms of the compromise does not amount to a sanction of the compromise by the Court. In order that a compromise may bind a minor, the express leave of Court must be obtained, and it must be arrived at upon the exercise of the judicial discretion as to the propriety of the

But, if she be duly appointed as the guardian ad litem of the minor, and makes an application under s. 525 to have an award filed in Court, and a decree is passed in terms of the award, the minor is bound by it, unless good cause be shown to set aside the decree. Such a decree is not a nullity on the ground that previous sanction of the Court was not obtained under s. 462, Civ. Pro. Code. S. 462, Civ. Pro. Code, applies only to an agreement or compromise entered into by a next friend or guardian for a suit. It can have no application to an agreement to refer to arbitration where no suit is pending. If an award is filed under s. 525, and a guardian ad litem is duly appointed, but shows no cause why the award should not be filed, and allows judgment to be given in terms of the award, then also s. 462 has no application, for there is no agreement or compromise. But where a guardian ad litem is actually a party to an application to have the award filed, that is a party to an agreement that no objections shall be filed on either side, then sanction of the Court under s. 462 becomes necessary. And if such sanction is not obtained, the Court has power to set aside the decree so far as the minor is concerned. Though the Court will always be ready to give relief to illiterate women who have been imposed upon, yet it must observe the ordinary resognized rules of law and procedure in granting such relief. In dealing with questions arising between pleader and client, the client must be identified with his pleader, and suffer from the consequences of his dishonesty or want of skill. Her mother, acting as her guardian, alienated, in favour of her brother some of the properties inherited by her daughter from her husband. The widow had not been adjudged a lunatic under the Lunacy (District Courts) Act XXXV of 1858. Plaintiff, a reversioner, sued to set aside the alienation, naming the mother as the guardian of the widow. It did not appear that the Court of first instance satisfied itself that the widow was in fact a lunatic or that the mother was her proper guardian. The question was whether the lunatic could be sued without being so adjudged under the Act. Held that, in the absence of any provision in the Civ. Pro. Code for the case of persons of unsound mind who have not been adjudged to be so under the Act, the Court was bound to provide for the protection of the lunatic defendant by the appointment of a proper guardian ad litem, the right of suit against the lunatic being unquestionable. The suit was therefore remanded for disposal in due course after ascertainment by the Court of first instance that the widow was a lunatic and that the proposed guardian ad litem was a fit and proper person. The Subordinate Judge made the inquiry and reported that the petitioner was a pauper, and also that she had rendered herself incapable of appealing as a pauper by entering into an agreement, with some persons falling within the terms of s. 407 (d). Held that the order of the Court calling upon the Subordinate Judge to report did not operate as a final disposal of the application, and that it was open to the High Court upon the receipt of the report to consider whether the case was one in which leave to appeal in forma pauperis ought to be granted. But the High Court dismissed the application on the ground that the petitioner had entered into an agreement falling within s. 407 (d). In his application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, the plaintiff did not set forth what was the law or rules or custom governing the succession to the Mahantship of the Math concerned, nor did he assert that by what law, rule or custom he was the one and only successor and he simply stated that ten years ago the defendant got unlawful possession of the Math property, that the late Mahant had two chelas of whom one was dead and the plaintiff was the survivor, that the defendant was sister's son of the late Mahant, and that for this reason, the defendant had no right by law or custom in the presence of the plaintiff. (5021)—O. 33, rr. 5, 6, 7 (=*Civ. Pro. It does not follow, because at the time when the Court acting under s. 408 fixes a day for the hearing of the application, it sees no reason to refuse the application on any of the grounds stated, that at a later stage, when exercising the powers conferred by s. 409, it is not open to the Court to consider whether the applicant is subject to any of these prohibitions. All that s. 408 means is that the Court, at that stage of the proceedings, must be of opinion that, on the materials before it, there is no reason to refuse the application on any of the grounds stated in s. 407. It is also the duty of the Court, when the hearing takes place at a later stage under s. 409, to consider whether or not the applicant is subject to any of the prohibitions specified. Paragraph (c) of s. 407 does not refer solely to a question of jurisdiction. Under that section, an applicant must also make out that he has a good subsisting prima facie cause of action capable of enforcement. AMIRTHAM v. The Court before which an application is made to sue in forma pauperis has power not only to enquire into the question of pauperism, but also as to whether the applicant has a prima facie good and subsisting cause of action; and for the purpose it may take evidence under s. 409, Civ. In case of doubt the Court whose permission is asked to sue in forma pauperis should grant the application if the applicant has made out that he is a pauper: but even in such a case, if the Court proceed to shift the matter, it cannot be said to exceed its jurisdiction, but at the most would be acting irregularly. The application was rejected, and the actual words of the order were as follows:—"Since the applicant does not wish to proceed with the application, I reject his application to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis and order him to pay opponent's costs, and bear his own." Plaintiff again applied after some time for leave to sue in forma pauperis for the redemption of the same mortgage. The defendants did not object, and the application was granted and it was registered as a suit. The enquiry lasted over more than 3 years, and when the case was nearly ripe for judgment, the Government pleader intervened and asked that the inquiry should not proceed further until plaintiff had paid the costs due to Government in respect of his former rejected application. The lower Court advised the plaintiff to pay the costs due to the Government and the Court-fees in the present suit; but the plaintiff declined to do either. The suit was accordingly dismissed, under s. 413 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, and the plaintiff was ordered to pay the Court-fees under s. 412 of the Code.

Held on appeal (i) that the order rejecting the appellants's first application was an order under s. 409 of the Code, and that the refusal operated as a bar to the entertainment of the second application; (ii) that the lower Court was not only competent but bound to take notice at any stage of the suit of this bar to its jurisdiction; (iii) and that the two applications were made in the same right to sue and not in different rights. As a general rule a Court cannot set aside any order passed by it of its own motion, but this rule does not apply to matters involving questions of jurisdiction, limitation, res judicata etc., which take away jurisdiction. The same set of facts which the mind at once grasps as jurally integral ought not to be made the basis of repeated proceedings, and the rule obtains that all the circumstances which exist when the former of two actions is brought, and can be brought forward in support of it shall be brought forward then, and not reserved for a second action arising out of the same events. Though the forms of action differ, the cause of action is identical, and the test is whether the evidence in support of both actions is substantially the same. RANCHOD MORAR v. The Court accordingly dismissed the suit, but made no order under s. 412 of the Civ. Pro. Code of 1882. This was in October 1908. Government had then ninety days time within which to appeal. Before the period expired, the new Code of 1908 came into force, which allowed Government to apply at any time to the Court for an order for the payment of Court-fees. (O. 33, r. 13.) Government applied to the Court under r. 12 of O. 33; but it dismissed the application on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to pass a fresh order. On appeal to the High Court: Held (1) that the order passed by the lower Court under r. 12 of O. 33 was an order under s. 47 and was therefore appealable. (2) That, although at the time the suit was dismissed, the only remedy open to Government was to apply to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, before the period prescribed for it could expire, a new law had come into force, which gave a new remedy to apply under r. 12, O. 33. It enabled Government to make an application to the Court to pass an order according to law. The test to be applied is whether the petitioner who applies to be made a party defendant is a person who has an interest in the right of redemption. Where the plaintiff alleges that the mortgage was executed by the executrix under circumstances which made the security binding upon the estate, and the defendant is the adopted son of the deceased owner of the estate, the latter is a person interested in the right of redemption. It is desirable that, in a suit for enforcement of a mortgage security, all the parties interested should be brought before the Court, in order that multiplicity of litigation might be avoided (14 C.W.N. 703, 11 C.L.J. 426, R.) The rule laid down in the case of (33 C. 425, Expl. & D.) that, to a suit to enforce a mortgage, persons claiming under a title adverse to that of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee are not proper parties, is not inflexible GOKUL CHANDRA ROY v. (5056)—O. 34, r. 14—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99—Decree on mortgage—Sale of property mortgaged—Sale proceeds insufficient to satisfy the decree in full—Balance remaining payable—Second mortgage on other property between same parties—Redemption-decree by mortgagor—Mortgagee applying for sale of the second property for the balance payable under the first decree—Sale.—In execution of a decree obtained in 1897 upon a mortgage, the mortgaged property was sold, but the sale-proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the judgment-debt. The same mortgagee was holder of another mortgage executed by the same mortgagor upon other property. The mortgagor having died, his heirs sued to redeem the second mortgage and obtained a decree for redemption and an order for payment of the mortgage-debt by instalments, the mortgagee having been entitled to charge on the property. In 1908, the mortgagee applied for execution against the second property in respect of the unpaid balance under the first decree. The Subordinate Judge held that an attachment was permissible even though s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, applied. The District Judge, on appeal, held that the application was in contravention of s. 99 and dismissed the darkhast, but, on review, he held that the attachment was permissible. On appeal: Held, that the Civ. Pro. Code of 1908, in so far as it repealed s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and substituted in its place, O. 34, r. 14, merely effected a change of procedure in the manner in which mortgaged property had to be realised in execution or money-decrees, and therefore the mortgagee was entitled under

The Court made an order directing that the application should be placed on the record of the suit. Held that the Court should have entertained and decided the application instead of treating it in the way it did. Held further, that an injunction could not properly be issued in respect of the property unless the plaintiff showed that she had a case, founded an apparent title, for the appointment of a receiver, for she would not be entitled to have a receiver appointed unless she made out a good prima facie title to the property. Pro. Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceedings under, not criminal proceedings.* The Civ. Pro. Code is not exhaustive. Therefore, a Court of Equity has power, in a case of specific performance, to interfere by an injunction, in order to maintain matters in their present state, even if the case does not fall strictly within the purview of s. 492 of the Code. There is no reason why, because the plaintiff might possibly be protected in one way, namely by the doctrine of lis pendens, he should not also be protected in another way, namely by an injunction. A suit for specific performance of a contract for lease of immoveable property does in fact relate to the property, which is the subject-matter of the contest, within the meaning of s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. A Civil Court has no right to issue an injunction which would have the effect of staying proceedings in a Criminal Court. But proceedings under s. 145, Crim. Pro. Code, cannot be said to be criminal proceedings within the meaning of that principle, and a Civil Court's action cannot possibly be fettered by any action, which one of the parties to the suit may choose to take before the Magistrate under the provisions of that section. execution of a decree of a Revenue Court for rent, where the decree is one appealable to the High Court, and the party against whom an order has been passed under s. 179 of the N.W. P. Rent Act, 1873, has sued in the Civil Court under s. 181 of the Act. This was an application under s. 492 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, by the appellant in an appeal from an original decree pending in the High Court, for an injunction to restrain the sale, in execution of a decree, of the property in dispute in the suit, in which the appeal arose. It appeared that in April 1874, the appellant's husband executed a deed of gift in favour of the appellant of certain property. In September 1874, the respondent obtained a decree for arrears of rent under the N.W.P. Rent Act, 1873. This decree was appealable to the High Court, and in fact was appealed from and affirmed. The respondent caused the property which was conveyed by the deed of gift to be attached in execution of this decree. The appellant claimed the property under the deed of gift, and the Collector disallowed the claim under s. 179 of the N.W.P. Rent Act, 1881. The appallant then, under s. 181 of the Act, instituted a suit in the Civil Court to establish her right to the property under the deed of gift. Held, the Civil Court could grant the injunction prayed for, and there was no prohibition of it under s. 56 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877. Pro. Code. (Act V of 1898, s. 195—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 188.*—The object of paragraph 3 of s. 493, Civ. Pro Code, 1882, is to provide a mode of enforcing an injunction. It is not to be assumed that the use of the word "disobedience" in the paragraph entitled the Court to treat a breach of the terms of an injunction as an offence and to punish such offence of its own motion. The Court can act under this section only when set in motion by the party, who deems himself aggrieved. (26 M. 494, F.) In a suit to cancel an instrument of sale of paddy, the Court issued an injunction restraining the defendant from selling the paddy specified in the document. The injunction was served on the defendant and afterwards the suit was decided in favour of the plaintiff, who afterwards presented a petition complaining that, while the injunction remained in force, the defendants had sold some of the paddy, and asked for sanction under s. 195, Crim. Pro. Code, to prosecute defendant under s. 188, Penal Code. The Judge caused a preliminary inquiry to be made and then called on defendant to show cause why he should not be committed under s. 493, Civ. Pro. Code, and he committed the defendant (present appellant) to the criminal jail for four months, the order being passed explicitly as a punishment for disobeying the injunction. Held that the application for sanction to prosecute the defendant did not give the Court authority to act under cl. (3), s. 493, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. MAUNG THA U. v. LUTCHMAN CHETTY, 14 Bur. L.R. 276.

motu.—Plaintiffs obtained a temporary injunction restraining the defendants from cutting certain crops. The defendants in breach of the terms of the injunction and after service upon them of the order cut the crops. The District Judge suo motu initiated contempt proceedings against the defendants and committed them to prison for contempt. Held that a District Court is not a Court of Record and has no inherent power to commit for contempt. The jurisdiction of a District Court to commit in this matter is conferred by s. 493, Civ. Pro. Code. Under this section the Court may, in case of disobedience, enforce an injunction by attachment of property or by imprisonment of the party disobeying. Plaintiffs sued for specific performance of the contract and for an injunction restraining the defendants from acting in violation of the terms of the agreement. During the pendency of the suit plaintiffs applied for and obtained an interim injunction restraining the defendants from disposing of the mica in their possession and that might be produced from the mines to third parties until the further order of the Court. Defendants perferred an appeal against this order. Held that the granting of a temporary injunction under s. 493, Civ. Pro. (5128)—O. 40, r. 1—Receiver—"Just and convenient."—The words "just and convenient" in O. XL, r. 1 of the Code of 1908, are very wide and were adopted from the English Judicature Act. A few of the principles on which the Courts of Equity Act in England are as follows:—The discretion is to be exercised with the greatest care and caution and it must be guided by law. A receiver is to be appointed on the principle of preserving property pending the litigation which is to decide the rights of the parties to the property. If the relief sought by a defendant is not connected with the subject matter of the plaint, the defendant must, if he desires a receiver, institute an action of his own for such purpose. A receiver is not appointed, except on special grounds, at the instance of a person alleging a mere legal title against another party in possession of immoveable property, who also claims to hold by a like legal title. PANA SEENEE v. ANA MAHALINGAM, 8 Ind. Cas. 1191.

(5129)—O. 40, r. 1—Suit on legal or equitable mortgage—Interest in arrears of property insufficient to pay charges thereon—Jurisdiction of the Court to appoint a Receiver—Principle of appointment.—A brought a suit on his equitable mortgaged by deposit of title-deeds to recover the amount due on his mortgage by sale of the mortgaged properties. The interest was in arrears. The property was also insufficient to pay the amount due to A, and a receiver was therefore appointed. The question was whether he was rightly appointed under the circumstances above described. Held: The wording of s. 503 of the old Code was materially different from the wording of O. XL, r. 1 of the Code now in force. The legislature has adopted the language used in the English Judicature Act, and now a Court may appoint a receiver where it appears just and convenient to do so. The practice of the English Courts should be followed. A receiver may therefore be appointed, as a matter of course, if the interest on mortgages, whether legal or equitable, is in arrears. Also, in case of equitable mortgages, (the expression puisne mortgages being included therein a receiver may be appointed, if there is reason to apprehend that the property is in peril or is insufficient to pay the charges or incumbrances thereon. Code, means that the Courts in India have the fullest jurisdiction to appoint as well as to remove a receiver in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. (4 C.W.N. 252, F.) In the case of an injunction, it is enough to show that a plaintiff has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged, but for the appointment of a receiver a good prima facie title has to be made out. Upon these facts the only course for the District Judge was to declare that the mortgagee's decree should have priority. The question whether the respondents had a lien on the crops did not properly come before the District Judge for decision in these proceedings. The District Judge in these proceedings had no power to direct that a certain person shall be joined as a defendant in a suit pending in a Subordinate Court. join in the appeal, the name of one of the plaintiffs was omitted. The lower appellate Court, however, heard the appeal as if all the five plaintiffs were appellants before it and decreed the appeal, and subsequently discovering that the name of one of the joint plaintiffs was not entered in the list of appellants added a postscript to its judgment to amend the decree by addition of his name, under the provisions of s. 544 of the Civ. If there is any special ground which also formed the basis of the decree under appeal, this section will have no application. BURE KHAN v. SANT RAM, 8 P. R. 1895.

(5183)—O. 41, r. 4 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 544)—Decree proceeding on ground common to all defendants—Decree in appeal by one only of defendants, effect of.—S. 544, Civ. Pro. Code does not direct that an appellate Court reversing, on an appeal by some only, the decree of the lower Court which was made upon a ground common to all the defendants or plaintiffs, as the case may be, should pass a decree in favour of the persons who are not before it in appeal. But the effect of the section is to make a decree passed in favour of some only of the defendants or plaintiffs under the circumstances mentioned in it operate in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be. When, therefore, a suit brought against several defendants was dismissed with costs, and, on an appeal by the plaintiffs, the case was remanded to the Court of first instance, and on an appeal against the remand order by one only of the defendants, the High Court set aside the remand order and restored the decree of the first Court, held that the decree of the first Court having been restored in its entirety, even the defendants who were not parties to the appeal before the High Court were entitled to take out execution of that decree for the costs. respect of a contract which was alleged to be a zar-i peshgi lease. The alleged contract was the subject of two separate deeds; the one an hypothecation bond, the other a simple lease. These documents were in favour of different parties; and the property which was the subject of one was not precisely the same as the property the subject of the other deed. The parties to the two deeds, who were all made defendants, contended that the two transactions were separate and independent, and the parties to the one deed had not connection with the other. The first Court gave the plaintiffs a decree against all the defendants regarding the two deeds as a single zar i-peshgi lease. One set of defendants, viz, the parties to the lease, appealed from the whole decree, and the lower appellate Court, taking a contrary view to that taken by the first Court, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Held that the Court below was competent to dismiss the suit as against those defendants who had appealed as well those who had not. in March, 1895. The representative of the lessor preferred in appeal against the decree making the defendant a party. The High Court in August, 1897, held that the lease to the defendant by Z was valid and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Held, that, under s. 544, Civ. Pro. Code, the decree of the High Court, of August, 1897, enured for the benefit of the defendant also; that the defendant was entitled to possession under his lease of 1880, which was never determined; that the refunding of the compensation money by the defendant was not a condition precedent to his obtaining relief by way of restitution; and that he was entitled to ask that the account might be adjusted by setting of mesne profits against the compensation money, received by the plaintiff from the time he had been wrongfully in possession up to the date of the High Court decree (August, 1897). Held, further, that, the relief claimed by the defendant being in the nature of equitable relief,—he being bound to do equity in seeking equity, it was not equitable that he should be permitted for his own convenience, because, at the time his right to relief arose, i.e., in August, 1897, he was unable or unwilling to refund the purchase-money, to postpone applying for the relief until the mesne profits had amounted to a sufficient sum to wipe off the amount of the compensation money, and that the accounts should be adjusted on the footing that the defendant had done what he ought to have done, viz., applied for restitution on the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit by the High Court in August, 1897. The ground that the mortgage was a sham was common to the defendant that appealed as well as to those that did not appeal. On appeal by defendant No. 3, the District Judge reversed the decree of the lower Court and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession, holding that the relief was not barred. The plaintiff, however, preferred no appeal against so much of the decree of the first Court as related to the dismissal of the suit for the lands, nor, preferred any memorandum of objections in the matter under s. 561 of the Code. Hence the present appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, on the ground that the suit was bad for misjoinder and that the lower appellate Court was wrong in giving a decree for the plaintiff when he neither preferred an appeal nor a memorandum of objections. Held:—Per Chief Justice: the point as to misjoinder was not raised in the lower appellate Court and, consequently, it could not be raised in the High Court. The lower appellate Court was wrong in decreeing for possession. Where a respondent to an appeal fails to give the notice required by s. 561, it is not open to the appellate Court to grant any relief to that respondent in a case where the granting of such relief is not necessarily incidental to the relief granted to a party, who was appealed. The lower appellate Court could have given full relief to the appellant before that Court by simply setting aside the decree which had been obtained against him. For, the powers of an appellate tribunal are the creature of statute and unless power to give such a decree as was given by the lower appellate Court in this case is to be found in the provisions of the Code, the decree could not be supported. The decree appealed against did not proceed on a ground common to the plaintiff and defendant No. 3, since it was a decree in favour of the plaintiff against defendant No. 3. Also, the decree appealed against did not proceed on a ground common to all the defendants, since it was not the case of defendant No. 3 that the plaintiff's claim for possession as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was barred by limitation. Semble.—S.561 only applies where a party has a right of appeal, but who, until forced or "invited" into Court, does not think fit to exercise it. Per Subrahmania Aiyar, J.—When, in an appeal, the conclusion of the appellate Court, with reference to matters properly arising before it, is such as to render any portion of the decree of the lower Court not made the subject of the appeal inconsistent with such conclusion, it would be not only anamalous to leave such portion of the decree in force, while setting aside only so much of it as was comprised in the appeal, but it might also involve a breach of the rules as to res judicata. So far as this Presidency is concerned, a memorandum under s. 561 may be filed even when the question arises as between co-respondents only. A delay in the presentation of the memorandum would also be excused. In cases not falling under s. 544, an appellate Court would be precluded from modifying the decree of the lower Court in favor of a party, who has filed neither an appeal nor a memorandum of objections except as part and parcel of the relief necessary to be granted to an appellant. The decree of the lower appellate Court reversed. KALAIKADA PILLAI v. The Court may, for the ends of justice, allow execution to proceed and take security for restitution from the judgment-creditor under r. 6, O. 41 of Act V of 1908, for stay execution and take security from the judgment-debtor under r. 5, but for each alternative the burden is on the judgment-debtor to show sufficient cause. A decree for recovery of possession of a zemindari having been passed against a minor represented by the Court of Wards, an appeal was preferred against it to the High Court on behalf as well of the minor as of the Court of Wards which had been made liable by the decree to account for the moneys, moveables, and immoveables of which it took possession in assuming charge of the estate, and also for mesne profits. The appellants who applied for stay of execution of the decree for possession being unable to furnish security as required by r. 5 of O. 41, the Local Government, with the sanction of the Secretary of State for India in Council, offered to execute a security bond for the required amount through its Chief Secretary on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council, but it was not shown that the security had been sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India in Council with the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting as provided by s. 40 of the Government of India Act of 1858. Held, that the security could not be accepted as sufficient. Held, further—That the Security could not also be accepted as offered by the Local Government in pursuance of the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1859, in the absence of information furnished to the Court as to the provisions or restrictions laid down by the Secretary of State for India in Council in that behalf. The Court ought not to accept a security, the validity of which is not free from doubt and the enforcement of which might lead to litigation. The powers and obligations of the Secretary of State for India in Council are defined by Statute, and if he exceeds the authority delegated to him, the holder of the officer for the time being, when sued in a Municipal Court, is entitled to urge by way of defence the ultra vires character of the transaction. The doctrine of equitable estoppel would not apply, where, as in this case, the act involves the waiver or renouncement of a right to perform a public duty. The sovereign power is not bound by the ultra vires acts of its agents. The Secretary of State for India in Council not being personally liable under the bond, the decree would not be executable against him under s. 145 of the Civ. Pro. Code, if the security were accepted; nor would that section preclude the Secretary of State for India in Council from questioning the validity of the security in a suit for its enforcement. The offer of the Secretary of State for India in Council to give security for the due performance of any decree that may be made against the appellants and in favour of the respondent was not an Act of State, and it was incumbent on the Courts, upon objection being taken by the respondent decree-holder, to examine whether the security was valid and enforceable. Per Mookerjee, J.—(Teunon, J., contra).—The offer of the security by the Secretary of State for India in Council was not for the "purposes of the Act" within the meaning of s. 40 of the Government of India Act, 1858. Per Teunon, J.—S. 40 of the Government of India Act, 1858, does not in respect of contracts restrict the Secretary of State for India in Council to the position previously held by the East India Company, but authorises him to enter into any contract whatsoever for the purposes of the Act; that is to say, for the purposes of the Government of India by and in the name of His Majesty. (5250)—O. 41, rr. 5, 6, s. 104, O. 43, r. 1 (= ss. 545, 546, 588, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Delivery of possession, stay of order for—Order staying proceedings, effect of, pending appeal—Appellate Court, power of, to stay order and proceedings—Rule nisi, order for, effect of—Execution, order for, when actually carried—Court, jurisdiction of—Express provisions of the Code—Procedure, matters of—Court, inherent power of—Security for restitution of property or for carrying out of decree.—S. 545 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply after execution has been carried out. The essence of a Code, is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law. On any point specifically dealt with by it, the law must be ascertained by interpretation of the language used by the legislature. In respect of such matters, the Court cannot disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction. The Code, therefore, binds Court so far as it goes. The Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) was not intended to be and is not exhaustive. It does not affect previously existing powers of the Court unless it takes them away. (17 A. 29, R.) The duty of a Judge is to apply dispositions of law not only to what appears to be regulated by their express provisions but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made and which appear to be comprehended either within the express sense of the law or within the consequences that may be gathered from it. (9 W. R. 402, R.) The Code does not affect the power and duty of the Court, in cases where no specific rule exists to act according to equity, justice and good conscience, though in the exercise of such powers it must be careful to see that its decision is based on sound general principles and is not in conflict with them or the intentions of the legislature. The Court will, where, the circumstances require it, exercise an inherent power to act ex delicto justitiae and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone it exists. The appellate Court having seizin of the appeal, has an inherent power over the subject of litigation the nature of which is indicated and implied by s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure and can, in the exercise of that power, and, notwithstanding that the decree has been executed, call upon the respondent to furnish security for the due performance of any decree which may be made on such appeal. (8 W.R, 144, Diss.; 12 W.R. 296, 17 W.R. 591, 10 M.I. When a superior Court has said that execution of a decree is not to take place, from that moment the Court to which application has been made for execution has no authority to execute it and delivery of possession under the authority of an order which was not then in force but had been suspended upon a stay granted by a superior Court is invalid. (1 C.W.N. 226, Expl. & Diss.) Per Woodroffe, J.—S. 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure has reference to the case where an order has been made for execution and the execution is pending or about to be given effect to. It does not apply where the order for execution has been actually carried out and where the property in suit has actually been delivered under the order made. Per Mookerjee, J.—The words in s. 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, "the appellate Court may for like cause, direct the Court which passed the decree to take such security," are not controlled by, or merely confined to, the case in which an order has been made for the execution of a decree and the execution-proceedings are still pending. The words in question are wide and the Court should not put too narrow a construction upon them and thus restrict the powers of the appellate Court. S. 546 of the Court authorises a Court of appeal to take security from a decree-holder even after execution of the decree under appeal has been completed. HUKUM CHAND BAID v. In this case, the application contained only unsworn statements of a very vague character and there was no affidavit, and it was held that upon such materials to require the appellant to deposit the costs of the suit in the Court below and of the appeal to the High Court would be a wrong exercise of the discretion vested in it by law. Held, further, that should the respondent be so advised, there was nothing to prevent him from putting in a fresh application, taking the precaution of accompanying it by a clear and satisfactory affidavit. (5274)—*O. 41, r. 10 (=Civ. Pro. The application was preferred on the 21st August, 1883. The appeal had been preferred on the 15th December, 1881. In the meanwhile, the appellants had incurred considerable expense in printing their evidence and preparing for the hearing of the appeal. It was however admitted on behalf of the appellants that they were her sons without means and were unable to give security. Held that the mere poverty of the appellants was, of itself, no sufficient ground for requiring them to find security for costs, but when it was alleged, as in the present case, that they had brought a merely speculative suit in the sense that they were mere dummies in the proceedings, and that their father was the real promoter of the litigation, it was necessary to peruse the judgment of the lower Court for the purpose of ascertaining, in a general way, whether there were grounds for bringing the defendants into Court. Upon consideration of the terms of that decision, and looking at the great delay on the part of the respondents in making this application for security, the Court was not disposed, at that late stage, virtually to stop the appeal, and the respondents, petition was accordingly refused. (5307)—O. 41, r. 12—Appeal it may be limited to specifi-d grounds—Jurisdiction of appellate Court—B ngal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) ss. 52, 105 and 106—Enhancement of rent for increase of area within specified boundaries—Increase of area, proof of.—It is not competent to a Court of appeal under O. 41, r. 12 of the Code to restrict an appeal to some specified grounds in admitting the appeal, and when an appeal is admitted, the whole appeal and not any selected ground is open to discussion. Where, in a proceeding under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, questions are raised and decided which properly fall within s. 106, a second appeal lies. (37 C. 30, R.) In a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground of any increase in area, the landlord must prove the area for which rent has been previously paid as well as the area now held by the tenant, and that such area is in excess of the original area. Where therefore a landlord proved that lands were once measured according to a known standard, that the rent was assessed on that measurement, that the area as well as the rent payable was entered in the kabuliyats, and that the area of the lands measured by the same standard is in excess of the original area. Held, that, unless it is established that the rent payable was a consolidated rent for lands within specified boundaries irrespective of the precise quantity, the landlord was entitled to claim additional rent. (20 C. 579, 6 C.W.N. 318, Expl. & D.; 24 C. 251, 5 C.L.J. 538, R.) Where it is specifically shown that the area of a land was ascertained by measurement and rent assessed on such measurement, the mere fact that boundaries of the land are mentioned in the kabuliyat does not exclude the operation of s. 52, Bengal Tenancy Act. In setting additional rent for increased area it is open to the Settlement Officer, in consideration of possible errors in the original measurement, to allow the enhancement at a somewhat reduced rate. The Court ought to grant restoration where the default is explained satisfactorily. The Court has power to restore also on other grounds. The legislature does not intend to give the respondent an absolute right to the judgment passed for default, without any judicial adjudication on the merits. English Courts do not feel fettered in their discretion in cases of this kind. English Courts have restored cases dismissed for default, when the failure to appear was due to the pleader's mistake or negligence. In India also the Court has acted likewise. The Court has ample disciplinary powers over pleaders and to subject parties to costs. MURUGA CHETTY v. RAJASAMI, 1912, M.W.N. 332 = 22 M.L.J. 284 = 11 M.L.T. 280.

Order granting restoration of appeal—"Affecting the decision of the case," meaning of—Appeal from decree—Ground of objection.—The law allows an appeal from an order refusing to grant an application under s. 558, Civ. Pro. Code, for the restoration of an appeal dismissed for default under s. 556. But it does not provide for an appeal from an order granting such an application. The meaning of the words in s. 591, Civ. Pro. Code, "affecting the decision of the case," is that it must be shown that the error defect or irregularity has affected the decision of the case on the merits. In this view, an order under s. 558, Civ. Pro. Code, granting the restoration of an appeal dismissed for default, not being an order affecting the decision of the case on the merits, cannot, under s. 591, Civ. Pro. Code, be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal. GULAB KUNWAR v. The party whom it is sought to bring on is required to be interested in the result of the appeal, that is to say, he must be shown to be interested in the result of the appeal before he is brought on, for once he is brought he may be said to acquire an interest as a result of being brought on. When a defendant has been exonerated and there is no appeal against so much of the decree as exonerates him, no decree can be passed against him in an appeal by any other party to a suit as he is no party to such appeal, and he cannot be said to be interested in the result of such appeal by another party unless the decree sought to be obtained against the respondents in the appeal would have the effect of prejudicing him in some way or other. The plaintiffs alleged that the mortgage debt had been satisfied ; while the defendant alleged that a sum of Rs. 9,687 was due to him on the mortgage. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,934. The plaintiffs appealed against the decree ; the defendant preferred objection to the decree under s. 561, Civ. Pro. Code, alleging that the sum of Rs. 7,695 was due to him in addition to the sum found due by the Munsif. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal and the objections. In second appeal, the appellant (the second mortgagee) paid a Court-fee computed on the principal sum originally secured by the mortgage. The defendant paid on his petition of objections under s. 661, Civ. Pro. Code, a Court-fee of Rs. 2. Held, that where a mortgagor or a mortgagee appeals, not rising the question as to the right to redeem, but the question only as to the amount which is payable to effect redemption, the Court-fee should be computed ad valorem on the difference between the amounts alleged to be due on the one side and the other. When no question is raised in appeal as to the right to redeem, the nature of the suit is changed from a suit to redeem a mortgage, and the subject-matter of the dispute is money only. D also mortgaged some land to H for Rs. 100. In January, 1890, D sold a share in a village to plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3, and 4, the sons of H. In the deed it was stated that sums of Rs. 290 and Rs. 100 were left with the purchaser for the discharge of the debts due upon the four deeds mentioned above. The present defendant then sued D and plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3, and 4, for pre-emption and obtained a decree for possession of the property on payment of various sums including Rs. 100 to H and Rs. 200 to "the heirs of M, whosoever they may be determined to be." As neither the heirs of M nor H were parties to the decree, the decree-holder managed to obtain possession of the property without paying those two sums. H and his sons (plaintiff's Nos. 2, 3 and 4) then filed the present suit for recovery of the sums. The Munsif decreed Rs. 100 and interest thereon to H. but rejected the claim for Rs, 290. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge. On 21st April, 1900, a summons was issued to the defendant fixing May 1st for hearing of the appeal. The summons was served on April 26th. On May 1st the defendant asked for an adjournment in order that he might file objections under s. 561, Civ. Pro. Code. The Judge refused his request saying:—"There has been this decree against him for three and a half months and he has not appealed against it &c., &c." The Judge allowed the appeal. Held, that the object of s. 561, Civ. Pro. Code, is to allow a respondent to an appeal to act precisely as the defendant wished to act in this case, and that one month should in such cases be allowed to elapse between the service of summons on the respondent and the date of hearing the appeal. Held further, that the defendant having by his appeal brought the whole case before the Court, it could be dealt with as if he had put forward objections under s. 561, Civ Pro. Code, and they had been dismissed by the lower appellate Court. Held, that plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3, and 4, not having been parties to the contract with D in the capacity of representatives of M. in which they were sued, were strangers and could not enforce that contract. Further, that neither the plaintiffs nor any other person as representatives of M. could have sued the purchasers of the property on the contract contained in the sale deed. Held, further, that the suit was not maintainable by H as he did not sue upon his mortgage but upon the decree for pre-emption to which he was not a party, and as he, not being one of the purchasers of the property, was not a party to the contract and could not have enforced it against the purchasers, and could not enforce it against the defendant and the pre-emptor

He could support that decree by any contention with which he could have contested the case in the Court of first instance, unless he had waived any particular point. The section is one similar to a rule under the Judicature Act in England. It was intended to obviate the necessity of a respondent, against whom a portion of the decree was passed, contesting that portion by a separate appeal. It was never intended that the respondent should be limited in his contention in support of the decree, when it was absolutely in his favour. BHAGWAT RAI v. DEODAT RAI, A.W.N. 1887, 44.

The plaintiffs contended that they were not bound by the condition for the payment of deorha. The defence of the appellant was that the deorha was payable and that he was entitled to certain sums on account of improvements effected by him and rent of certain land demised by him to the respondents. The Court of first instance disallowed the deorha, but allowed other items on account of improvements and rent. Both parties appealed to the District Judge, the defendant-appellant claiming the deorha and objecting to the lower Court's order as to costs. His appeal was dismissed. The plaintiffs in their appeal objected to the items awarded on account of improvements and rent and also as to costs awarded by the lower Court. The District Judge allowed the appeal as to costs only and dismissed the rest of the appeal. The defendant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner against the dismissal of his appeal by the District Judge. The plaintiffs instead of filing a separate appeal filed objections under s. 561, Civ. Pro. Code. Held, that the objections under s. 561, filed by the plaintiffs, were inadmissible. The Munsiff granted a decree against the agent. Against this decree the agent appealed, but the plaintiff did not appeal, nor did he raise any objection to the decree under s. 561 of the Code. The lower appellate Court held that the proprietors, and not the agent, were liable and that it had no power to pass a decree against the proprietors. Held, on second appeal, that the plaintiff was entitled under s. 622 of the Code to ask for a revision. Held, also, confirming the decree of the lower appellate Court, that it was not open to the Court to grant any relief to the plaintiff, inasmuch as the granting of such relief was not necessarily incidental to the relief granted to the agent who had appealed. The additional stamp was not furnished, on the ground that the higher tribunal had been moved to revise the order declaring that the objection was insufficiently stamped; and the memo. of objections was, in consequence, dismissed for default. The appeal against the appellate order was also insufficiently stamped. Held, that the order rejecting the objection as understamped after default made to pay the duty ordered, is an "order" and not a "decree" and it is an order against which no appeal is provided by the Civ. Pro. Code. Even if it be taken to be a decree, and appealable as such, the High Court, in appeal, should not interfere, unless it is established that there was in fact no default or that there was sufficient cause for excusing the default. The failure of the party to obey an order for the filing of additional Court-fees is a default, irrespective of the legal merits of the order, and it affords no sufficient grounds for excusing such default, that the party considered the order to be wrong. The procedure of a Court cannot be regulated by what may be the opinion of a party or by what he may hope to establish against the opinion of the original Court in appeal. There having been a wilful disobedience of an order in this case, the dismissal was but proper. If a party feels himself aggrieved by any stamp-order, he may, within the period allowed for compliance therewith, move a higher Court against it but if he has not succeeded in getting the order set aside by the last date fixed for obedience, the party must obey the order, or subject himself to a valid disposal of the case on the ground of his default. S. 582-A of Civ. Pro. Code, has no application, inasmuch as the under-stamping was deliberate, and not due to any mistake; and this is not a case in which it will be proper to allow any extension of time under s. 5 of the Limitation Act. The appeal to the High Court is under-stamped. No opportunity need, however, be given to the appellant for making good the deficiency in the HighCourt, for two reasons, namely, the appeal does not lie and it could not now be stamped within the period allowed by the law of limitation for its due institution in the Court. than the original decree when plaintiff not appealing—Validity.—The plaintiff sued the defendant, the proprietors of an adjoining estate, for recovery of possession of certain lands, after determination of the boundary between the two estates. The Munsiff partially decreed the suit. The defendant appealed, but plaintiff neither appealed nor filed any objection against the decree of the Munsiff. The decree of the Munsiff was modified by the lower appellate Court in favour of the defendant, and thereupon, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, which remanded the case and directed a fresh investigation to be made by the Civil Court Amin by comparison of the maps, of both the parties. After a fresh enquiry, the lower appellate Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, giving him more lands than he recovered in the first Court. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that, as the plaintiff had not appealed from the judgment of the Munsiff, the lower appellate Court had no power to award him more than he recovered in the Munsiff's Court. Pro. Code, as it stood before and after its amendement by s*. 49 of Act VII of 1888, pointed out and explained.—A shop was mortgaged by G and M (deceased), whose representatives were defendants 8 to 12, to G R (deceased), whose representatives were defendants 4 to 7. Defendants 4 to 7 sub-mortgaged to defendant 3, who sold his mortgaged rights to defendant 2, who sold the shop to defendant 1. In 1902, R purchased the equity of redemption from defendants 8 to 12 and sued defendants 1 to 12 for possession as mortgagors of the said shop. The first Court framed six issues, but the main contention was whether defendants 8 to 12 had already sold their rights to G R in 1869. The Munsiff found the sale of 1869 and the successive proprietary titles of defendants 1 and 2 proved and so dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Divisional Judge, finding the sale of 1869 not established, remanded the case under s. 562, Civ. Pro, Code. In appeal to the Chief Court, it was contended that (1) the case was not decided by the first Court on a preliminary point and (2) the sale of 1869

to G R was not proved. When the case came on before the single Bench, the appellant's pleader gave up the first ground of appeal and stated the form of remand was correct. But the counsel of the respondent insisted that this was not so. The single Bench, consequently, referred the case to the Division Bench for giving a definite ruling. Held, that the first Court disposed of the case on a preliminary point, within the meaning of s. 562, Civ. Pro. Code, as amended by s. 49 of Act VII of 1888, althouh evidence was recorded on the whole case. Also, the difference between the provisions of s. 562, Civ. Pro. Pro. Code. Found that the plaintiff on whom the onus lay, had failed to prove a custom whereby Bhandari Khatris of Vairowal village, Tarn Taran Tahsil of the Amritsar District are prohibited from alienating ancestral property without the consent of collaterals. The fact that some Khatris, who own land in a village, are described in the Revenue Records as khud kasht does not prove that they are agriculturists in the sense that they are dependent on agriculture. The record-of-rights cannot operate to make a proprietor an agriculturist and subject to customs which govern agriculturists. A non-agriculturist proprietor is bound so much of the record-of-rights as deals with pre-emption and similar customs, but in matters of succession and alienation he cannot be bound by custom and Hindu Law at the same time. The Riwaj-i-Am of the Tahsil though attested by land holding non-agriculturist Khatris, does not make the customs as to succession and alienation applicable to them. It does not follow that because a Khatri family follows agricultural pursuits it adopts the general custom of agriculturists. HARNAM SINGH v. DEVI CHAND, 117 P.L.R. 1901 = 107 P.R. 1901

Code*, 1882)—Decision on merits—Power of appellate Court to remand suit—Finality of order of appellate Court—Leave to appeal to Privy Council.—Suit to recover possession of property purchased by the plaintiff. Several defences were raised. One was of a preliminary nature, viz., that there was misjoinder, and this was overruled. The next was as to the genuineness of a will. The Court of first instance took the evidence and heard the case. The question of will was decided against the plaintiff and the suit dismissed. The other issues in the suit were not gone into. On appeal, the appellate Court held that the defendant was liable to account to the plaintiff and remanded the suit under s. 562, Civ. Pro. Code, for disposal on the other issues according to law. Held that that the remand contemplated by s. 562 was one made in a case where the first Court disposed of the suit on a preliminary point so as to exclude the evidence of essential facts. That was not the present case. The only preliminary point was the misjoinder. The question as to the genuineness of the will on which the plaintiff's case entirely rested was not a preliminary point so as to exclude evidence. The appellate Court had miscarried in puprorting to remand under s. 562 and the case fell within s. 565 of the Code, which required the appellate Court to decide issues on which the evidence had been taken. Held also that the decree of the appellate Court (High Court) affirming the liability of the defendant to account to the plaintiff was final. The High Court should have granted the plaintiff leave to appeal to the Privy Council. SYED MUZHAR v. RADHA BIBI, 5 M.L.J. 20, P.C.

But the lower appellate Court found in his favour as regards his title and remanded the case to that Court under s. 562 of the Code, Held, that the order of remand was wrong, as there was no occasion for remanding the whole case to the Court of first instance, inasmuch as the case had not been decided by that Court upon a preliminary point. (5602)—*O. 41, r. 25 (=Civ. Pro. (5603)—*O. 41, r. 25 (=Civ. Pro. On appeal preferred by the defendants, the lower appellate Court summarily disposed of the issue raised before it, as to the execution of the bond, without holding a proper trial for the purpose and without passing a proper judgment. The High Court held that the parties were, under the circumstances entitled to a trial of the above said issue essential to the right decision of the suit on the merits, and the lower appellate Court having failed to properly try the same, as it ought to have done, the case must be treated as falling within the provisions of s. 566 of the Civ. Pro. Code, empowering the High Court to refer such issue back to the lower appellate Court directing it trial, there had come to the applicants' knowledge new and important evidence, viz., certain information supplied by a certain man. The Judge refused the application : Held, that such refusal manifestly rendered the evidence inadmissible. The Code of Civil Procedure permits applications for review on the ground of such discovery of evidence, but it exacts very strict conditions so as to prevent litigants lying on their oars when they ought to be looking for evidence—it enjoins the Judge to require the facts as to the absence of negligence to be strictly proved ; and it makes the Judge who tried the case final on such applications. The said party then appealed to the appellate Court on the whole case ; and made an application for permission to examine the man, whose information led to the application for review which was dismissed. The appellate Court ordered that "further evidence" be taken. "Further evidence" was taken, before one of the appellate Judges, not merely of the man, about whom the application was made, but of several other witnesses. The appellate Court did not record any reasons of such admission of "further evidence." Held, that the appellate Court had no jurisdiction to admit that evidence, that it was wrongly admitted, and did not form part of the evidence in the appeal to the Privy Council, and must, therefore, be disregarded. Held, also, that the legitimate occasion for s. 568 of the Civ. Pro. Code is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, not when a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. That is the subject of the separate enactment in s. 623. Held, further, that in s. 568 the word "requires" means needs or finds needful. The plaintiff sued the defendants, a Railway Company, for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through their negligence by their train in which he was travelling, overshooting the platform. One of the questions at issue related to the sufficiency of light at the time of the accident. The first Court held that the train over shot the platform and that it was dark at the time of the accident and allowed the plaintiff's suit. On the defendant's appeal the Judges of the appellate Court adopted the view of the lower Court that the train had overshot but on the question of the sufficiency of light they found themselves unable to come to any decided conclusion from the evidence on record. Owing to that difficulty and to the vital importance of settling the question with certainty it was suggested by the Court that the Judges should visit the scene of the accident under conditions approximating as closely as possible to those which prevailed when the plaintiff met with his injuries. That suggestion was welcomed by Counsel on both sides, and after communication with the local observatory it was suggested that on the evening of certain day the conditions then in question would be, as nearly as possible, exactly reproduced. At that time, therefore, attended by legal advisers of both parties, the learned Judges visited the scene of the accident, with the result that they were clearly of opinion that the plaintiff's accident must be attributed to his own carelessness and that the Company could not be held liable for negligence. The plaintiff, thereupon, appealed to the Privy Council, where the defendants contended that the appellate Court's procedure was so remote from judicial methods as to constitute an arbitration and that the result was not appealable. Held, that it was impossible to admit the legitimacy of the appellate Court's procedure or the soundness of its conclusions, the case being decided, not on the testimony given at the trial as to what took place on the night of the accident, but by the appellate Court Judge's observations of what they saw on another night altogether ; that the plaintiff was not shown to have done anything to exclude his appeal. The fact that the counsel of both parties acceded to the appellate Court's suggestion of viewing the locality did not constitute the proceeding an arbitration and make the decision non-appealable. (5649)—O. 41, r. 27, s. 100) (= Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 568, 584)—Appellate Court—Additional evidence—Discretion.—Under s. 568 of the Civ. Pro. Code, a party to an appeal is not entitled to produce a additional evidence in appeal, as of right, but the Court may, in its discretion, admit additional evidence. A refusal by the appellate Court to exercise the discretion would be an error or defect in procedure, because the above s. 568 distinctly implies that such discretion must be exercised by the Court ; but a refusal, in the exercise of the discretion, to admit additional evidence, is not such an error or defect, that is to say, where the Court has exercised its discretion, and, as the result of the exercise of its discretion, has refused to admit additional evidence, it cannot be said that a substantial error or defect in procedure has taken place so as to afford a ground of second appeal under s. 584 of the Code. It follows that the rejection of their application to be allowed to adduce such evidence contravened no right. It, further, seems that under that section the admissibility of additional evidence is made to depend not upon the relevancy or materiality to the issue, before the Court, of the evidence sought to be admitted, or upon the fact whether or not the applicants had an opportunity of adducing evidence at some earlier stage, but upon whether or not the appellate Court requires the evidence " to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause." The test of the admissibility of evidence, therefore, seems to be the requirements of the Court itself. The language of that section shows that the appellate Court, to which the application is made, is to be the sole and final Judge of the question whether circumstances exist which require the admission of the evidence, and that the discretion vested in the Court, for the purpose, is not one which the Legislature intended should be subject to revision or control by a higher tribunal. For these reasons, the rejection of the application under that section cannot be said to involve any substantial question of law within the meaning of s. 596 of the Code, so as to give the right to an appeal to the Judicial Committee. The defendant applied for an adjournment which the Munsiff refused. The defendant thereupon refused to examine his witnesses, and the Munsiff decided against him. On appeal, the Judge thought that the defendant's case had not been heard owing to the refusal of the Munsiff to adjourn, and therefore made an order that the witnesses of the defendant, who had been absent, should attend at his Court to be examined. But subsequently, he made an order, sending back the case to the Munsiff to be tried by him. On second appeal to the High Court, held that there was no reason why the Judge should not have sent back the case to be tried by the Munsiff, and that therefore the second appeal should be dismissed. Per Mahmood, J—The first order passed by the first appellate Court was one contemplated by ss. 568 and 569, Civ. Pro. Code, and must be taken to have been an interlocutory proceeding. The order would seem to be of such a nature as the Judge could modify suo motu or upon the application of either party, there being no decision of finality in the exercise of the discretionary power conferred by s. 569 of the Code. Here, the modification of the order was the result of an application by the defendant, and that would not render the order anything more than an interlocutory proceeding, nor would it make the application an application for review, in its proper sense. Moreover as this was an appeal under s. 629 of the Code, it must be governed by the provisions of s. 578 read with s. 590 of the Code, and the action of the Judge complained of in the appeal was not irregular, nor did it affect the merits of the case so as to produce any injustice. (5664)—O. 41, r. 31 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 574)—Appeal—Judgment.—The imperative provisions of s. 574 of the Civ. Pro. Code, require that a Court of first appeal should not record a vague and summary judgment without any attempt being made to analyse the evidence, to assign reasons for conclusions, or to determine distinctly all the points which arose from the pleadings of the parties. The parties to the suit were brothers, and the plaintiff came into Court on the distinct allegation that on account of a partition in 1285 fasli, the family property was specifically divided among the parties, and that, in such division, certain specific shares were allotted to him, and that his possession was disturbed. The object of his suit was to obtain possession of the shares thus allotted to him. The Munsiff dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove his exclusive possession over any part of the property in suit; that the property must, therefore, be treated as still joint, and that, therefore, the suit for the relief prayed for could not be mainted without a claim for partition. The Munsiff's judgment, therefore, proceeded pratically on the finding that no partition such as would alter the nature of the joint property, so as to make it divided and separate, had taken place. The Subordinate Judge on the other hand on appeal, held that, "as alleged by the plaintiff, it is proved from the statement of his witnesses that a private partition was made, and the plaintiff does not stand in need of a formal partition." On his finding, he reversed the Munsiff's decree, and decreed the plaintiff's suit. In second appeal it was contended that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was bad in law as it had decreed the claim without determining the exact nature of the partition alleged by the plaintiff, and without ascertaining whether the land and houses, in which specific shares were claimed by the plaintiff, fell to his share in such partition. Held that this contention was sound. Without ascertaining the exact nature and scope of the partition and the details of the distribution or division of the property which took place in such partition, the plaintiff's suit could not succeed. The Subordinate Judge's judgment fulfilled none of these conditions, and was practically useless for purposes which the law requires in judgments of the Court of first appeal. Accordingly, the decree of the lower appellate Court was set aside and the case remanded to it for disposal according to law. MANGRU RAI v. BISHUNDIAL RAI, A. W.N. 1884, 99.

(5670)—*O. 41, r. 31 (=s. 574, Civ. Pro. Pro. Code, the proper procedure is to make an order setting aside the decree, and remanding the case to the lower appellate Court to be disposed of according to law. If the Judge of the Court to which the case is remanded is the Judge who heard the appeal in the first instance, and if he considers that he can properly dispose of the remanded case without a re-hearing of the appeal, the writing of a judgment which satisfies the requirements of s. 574, without re-hearing the appeal, would be a compliance with the order that the case be disposed of according to law. But in all cases, where the Judge of the Court to which the case is remanded, is not the Judge who heard the appeal in the first instance, and in all cases where the Judge of the Court is the Judge who heard the appeal in the first instance, but he does not consider that he can properly dispose of the remanded case without a re-hearing of the appeal, a re-hearing is necessary in order that there may be a compliance with the order, of the High Court that the case be disposed of according to law. (5687-a)—O. 41, r. 33—Scope of—Dismissal of claim without objection by defendant in respect of portion decreed.—The words of O. 41, r. 33 of the Code are very wide, but care and judicial discretion must be used by the appellate Court in the exercise of the powers conferred by the rule. In a proper case, the Court, of course, is quite entitled and should not hesitate to exercise them. It is not easy, nor perhaps expedient, to lay down any hard and fast rule. One principle, however, may be safely stated: the Courts in the exercise of powers conferred by O. 41, r. 33, should not lose sight of the other provisions of the Code itself, nor of the Court Fees Act nor of the law of limitation. In particular, they should bear in mind the case stated by way of illustration at the foot of the rule. In a case in which there is no sufficient reason for a respondent neglecting either to appeal or to file objections under O. 41, r. 22, against that portion of decree which is against him, the Court should hesitate before allowing him to object at the hearing of the appeal filed by the appellant. The object of r. 33 is manifestly to enable the Court to do complete justice between the parties to the appeal—where for example it is essential in order to grant relief to an appellant that some relief should at the same time be granted to the respondent also, the Court may grant relief to the respondent, although he has not filed an appeal or preferred an objection. Of such cases the illustration to the rule is a type. Hence where a plaintiff sued the defendant for rent of a holding and claimed Rs. 294-7-0 and the defendant pleaded that the claims had been discharged but the Assistant Collector gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 96-11-11, and the plaintiff appealed against the decree in so far as it dismissed his claim, and the defendant neither filed a cross-appeal, nor objections as provided by O.41, r. 22 of the Code and the District Judge, on return of findings on certain issues remitted by him to the Assistant Collector, dismissed the claim of the plaintiff in toto, held by the Full Bench, the dismissal by the Judge of the plaintiff's suit in its entirety was not a proper exercise by him of the powers conferred by O.41, r. 33. (5714)—O. 45, r. 3 (=s. 600, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Privy Council, leave to appeal—Suit filed in 1906—New Code.—In the suit filed by the respondent, the applicant pleaded inter alia that a Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit under s. 41 (b) of the Lower Burma Town and Village Lands Act. The first Court dismissed the suit on the preliminary point. On appeal a Full Bench held that the particular section was ultra vires of the Legislative Council of Lieutenant-Governor of Burma. The case was remanded to the first Court to be heard on its merits. The applicant asked for leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the point decided by the Full Bench. Held, that no leave could be granted under s. 600 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, inasmuch as the respondent's suit may be dismissed, in which case the granting of the certificate might put him to needless expense. Held, also, that the suit having been filed in 1906, the provisions of the new Code of 1908 did not apply. Code, 1882, s. 646-B)—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 16—Discretion of Court.*—S. 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act must be read along with s. 646-B of the Civ. Pro. Code. The latter section gives to the High Court a discretion to pass such orders as it thinks proper in cases referred for its orders under that section, and such cases include a case where a Small Cause suit has been irregularly tried by an ordinary Civil Court. The obvious object of the section is to enable the High Court to pass such order as the justice of the case requires, without being compelled to decide the case solely with reference to jurisdiction, and thus perhaps put the parties to the expense and trouble of fruitlessly litigating the same question again before the very Judge, sitting as a Small Cause Court, who had already tried the case on the ordinary civil side, and with the greater formality thereby required and with the safeguard of an appeal. Though such a case comes before the High Court under s. 622, Civ. Pro. Code, it seems reasonable that the principle of the express provision in s. 646-B should

(5780)—O. 47, r. 8—Review of judgment—Discovery of new and important evidence—Procedure—Re-hearing of suit—Account books, entries in, proof of—Evidence, opportunity to adduce—Revision of order rejecting review.—Where a person satisfies the Court that he was unable with due diligency to produce some new and important evidence not within his knowledge at the time the decree was made, the Court ought to record an order admitting the review and then to give direction under r. 8 of O. 47 of the Code of 1908 for the rehearing of the suit. The Civ. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908) does not contemplate that the Court, on being satisfied of the existence of good grounds for review, should, instead of making an order admitting the rewiew, admit the new evidence sought to be adduced, and then hear the case, not on the merits but as to admissibility of review on the basis of that evidence taken with the other evidence in the case, and finally reject the review on the ground that, taken along with the other evidence, it did not assist the applicant. The High Court made the order which the Court below should have made, and directed that, when the case was re-heard, the applicant would have opportunity to prove specific entries in the account-book and also to give relevant evidence with regard to such entries, and the other side would also have an opportunity to rebut such evidence. (5783)—Sch. 2, r. —Award—Reference by parties interested — Defendant who did not appear not joining—Whether reference valid.—A suit was brought against several persons, one of whom was a minor. An official of the Court was appointed guardian ad litem for the minor defendant, but he did not put in an appearance. The parties, with the exception of the said minor, applied to the Court to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration. The reference was made and an award was given by the arbitrators, whereby the minor was exempted from the plaintiff's claim. Objections being taken to the award, held that the minor, not having put in an appearance, nor contested the suit, was not a person interested in the matters which were referred to arbitration, within the meaning of s. 1, sch. II of the Code, and his not joining in the reference did not invalidate it. ISHAR DAS v. KESHAB DEO, 7 A L.J. 807 =7 Ind. Cas. 68=32 A. 687. (24 A. 229, appl.)

(5784)—Sch. 2, r. 1 — Award — Reference by parties interested—Defendant who did not appear, not joining in the reference—Validity of reference.—The question whether a party is interested or not in a reference to arbitration depends upon his position at the time when the reference was made. The Code does not contemplate a reference to arbitration between the plaintiff and one defendant, and a trial between the plaintiff and another defendant. A suit was brought against two persons. The plaintiff and one of the defendants referred the matters in dispute to arbitration. The award was given by two of the arbitrators, whereby the non-joining defendant was exempted from the plaintiff's claim, and the suit was dismissed. Objections were taken to the award but they were overruled and a decree was passed in accordance with the award. Held, that the reference was invalid and the award which followed thereon was not a valid award. by the Court. There was, however, no application in writing signed by the parties consenting to arbitration. Subsequently, the parties appeared in person before the arbitrator and even evidence was taken in their presence. On an objection that there was no valid reference to arbitration according to law. Held, that the parties to the suit could ratify the reference to arbitration, although the requirements of s. 506 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, had not been strictly followed by the Court in the first instance. GOKARAN NATH v. (5786)—Sch. 2, r. 1 (=Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 506)—Agreements to refer to arbitration—Absence of application for order of reference—Power of Court.—The Court cannot make a private arrangement between the parties the basis of a reference to arbitration, in the absence of a written application as required by s. 506 of the Civ. Pro. Code, such an order of reference is ultra vires, and the arbitration award thereon cannot furnish a basis for a decree in the case. In the present casse, the scope of the suit was limited to one plot of land, but during the pendency of the case in appeal before the lower appellate Court, the parties, by a private arrangement, agreed to refer all disputes between them to arbitration. The matters to which the submission related went far beyond the scope of the suit, and although the agreement was produced before the Judge, no application such as is contemplated by s. 506, Civ. Pro. Code, was made to him ; and there was nothing to show that the parties ever intended that the Court should refer the particular dispute as to the field to arbitration under Ch. XXXVII of the Code. The Judge, however, made an order of reference to the arbitrators, and passed a decree in accordance with their award. Held, that the order was ultra vires of the Judge, and the case was remanded for trial on the merits. BHAIRO SINGH v. RUPA SINGH, A.W.N. 1884, 312.

(5787)—Sch. 2, r. 1 (=s.506, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882)—Reference to arbitration—Court's power to make the reference.—The Court has no power of its own motion to order a reference to arbitration and it can only do so under Ch. XXXVII of the Code of Civil Procedure. The power to make the order of reference is given by s. 508, Civ. Pro. Code, and s. 506 of the Code contains the provisions as to how the order is to be applied for. It appears, from s. 506 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that (1) all the parties to the suit must desire a reference, (2) they must all apply to the Court for an order of reference, (3) they must apply either in person or by their respective pleaders specially authorized in writting, and (4) the application must be in writting and state the particular matter sought to be referred. The absence of a written application to seek reference does not make the order of reference invalid. HAJI WIDINA v. LUXMIBAI, 1 Bom. L.R. 617=23 B. 629.

On the 6th April, 1908, during the pendency of the suit, A and B executed a muchilika whereby they agreed out of Court to refer their dispute to five arbitrators. C signed the muchilika later. On the next day A withdrew from the submission. A petition was subsequently put in on behalf of B, C, D and E, under ss. 375, and 523 of the Code of 1882, praying that the matter may be referred to arbitrators as originally agreed. A opposed this petition on the grounds that (i) C did not sign the reference along with A and B; (ii) the other defendants were not parties to the reference; and (iii) s. 523, Civ. Pro. Code did not apply to pending suits. The lower Court found that the agreement to refer was true and that permission was subsequently obtained on behalf of the minor defendants D and E to settle the dispute by arbitration, and it therefore ordered the matter to be refered to arbitrators on the ground that the reference was a bar to the further hearing of the suit. Held that this order was appealable, and that, as plaintiff was not a party to the order, it was not one passed under s. 506 (1) of the Code. Held also that an agreement to refer cannot be treated as an adjustment under O. Private reference and reference through the intervention of Court are governed by the same reason and principle. Code, 1882, to appoint a new arbitrator in the place of another, when that other refuses to accept nomination, as refusal to accept nomination clearly signifies refusal to act. Parties to an administration suit entered into an agreement or compromise, which went beyond the actual matter of the suit between them, and the Court, under s. 375, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, made a decree in terms of the compromise, which provided that all points between the parties therein stated should be settled by arbitration of two arbitrators therein named. One of the arbitrators nominated by the respondents refused to accept his nomination. The Court, then, on the application of the respondents, who refused to appoint another arbitrator on their behalf, took the matter into its own hands under the latter part of s. 510 of the Code and adjudicated thereon. Held, that the decree under s. 375 of the Code was a final decree ordering the agreement and compromise of the parties to be carried into effect, and the Court had discharged itself of the lis between the parties; that there was, therefore, no suit pending, with which the Court could proceed under s. 510 of the Code; that the agreement entered upon was something different from and went much beyond the suit, and all that the Court could do was to take advantage of the sections of the Code which enabled it to keep the machinery of arbitration going; that the Court had power to appoint another arbitrator and was in no way precluded from making that appointment by the fact that the party, whose arbitrator had declined to accept nomination, refused to assist the Court by suggesting another name; and that parties who agreed to set up a tribunal of arbitration were not bound to submit the case referred to to another tribunal. But the parties subsequently agreed that the matters in dispute should be settled by a third person who was to submit his opinion to the arbitrators so that the latter might submit to the Court an award in accordance with that opinion. The third person sent his opinion to the arbitrators some days before the time fixed by the Court for the submission of the award, but the arbitrators failed to submit to the Court their award in time. Held, that the agreement of the parties to refer the matters in dispute to a third party could not possibly have the effect of superseding the appointment of arbitrators by the Court; and therefore that the Court could not proceed to hear the suit without itself making, under either s. 510 or s. 514, Civ. Pro. Code, an order superseding the reference to arbitration. JAMNA KUNWAR v. NASIB ALI, 24 A. 312 = A.W.N. 1902, 72.

Code*, 1882)—Agreement to refer to arbitration—Consent of arbitrators not taken—Refusal of some arbitrators to act—Appointment by Court of new arbitrators—Award passed by old and new arbitrators—Decree in accordance with award—Invalid award—Appeal.—An agreement to refer matters in dispute to five arbitrators was filed under s. 523, of the Code of 1882. Two arbitrators, who had never consented to act, refused to act and subsequently died. The Court appointed new arbitrators in their stead. The three of the old and the two new arbitrators made an award, and the Court passed a decree in accordance with it: Held, by the Full Bench, that no appeal lay against the decree, though the award, not having been made by the tribunal constituted in accordance with the agreement of the parties, was invalid. Per White, C.J.—If an arbitrator once consents to act and then refuses or dies, etc., the Court can appoint a new arbitrator under s. 510, independently of the wishes of the parties, but not otherwise. An award made by a tribunal of arbitration, not constituted in accordance with the provisions of the Code, is invalid. A defect in the constitution of a tribunal of arbitration is no ground for remitting an award under

s. 520 or for setting it aside under s. 521. Per Krishnaswami Aiyar, J.—When a decree is in accordance with the award, no appeal lies except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award, even if the award was invalid for want of submission, or for any irregularity in the reference, or for any other cause whatsoever, and whether an application to set it aside was not made or was made and refused. But if the arbitrators refuse to re-consider an award remitted to them, it becomes void. Therefore, a decree passed in accordance with such award is not a decree under s. 522 and is appealable. On the award being delivered, objections were preferred by the plaintiff which were disallowed, and a decree in accordance with the award was passed. It was not objected that s. 510 of the Civ. Pro. The plaintiff contended that the decree was wrong and must be set aside on appeal or at any rate on revision. Held, that the contention was not valid. It was too late to raise the objection that s. 510 was not applicable to the case, that no appeal lay and that the Court would not exercise revisional jurisdiction in the case even if the revision lay. The reasonable construction is that the action of the Judge under s. 510 should not be inconsistent with the agreement, if it contains any special provision on the subject. The answer was held to depend on whether an application to file an award under s. 525 of the Civ. Pro. Code, was a suit within the meaning of ss. 3, 12, or 47 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act. If it is a suit, the provisions of s. 12 of the Act come into play and the Court must follow the directions contained in that section when the award is submitted to it. If, on the other hand, it is not a suit, s. 74 of the Act entails upon the Court the duty of dealing with the application in accordance with the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Before filing such an award, however, the Judge can, upon objection by the debtor, inquire into the matters specified in s. 521 of the Code, and if he is in doubt as to its bona fides or freedom from fraud, can refer the parties to a regular suit, where the whole matter can be re-opened under s. 12 of the Act. Code, 1882, ss. 520, 521, 525, 526)—Grounds of objection—Jurisdiction—Objection that party to award did not consent to terms of reference—Regular suit.*—It appears from s. 526 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, that the Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate only upon the grounds of objection mentioned in ss. 520 and 521 of the Code. An objection taken by a party to an award that he did not agree to the terms of the ekrarnama, and that he was imposed upon in being persuaded to put his signature to the particular ekrarnama which was the foundation of the award, is not one which comes within the purview of ss. 520 and 521. When an objection of this nature is raised, it is the duty of the Court to reject the application under s. 525, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, and refer the parties to a regular suit. PALUT BHAGAT v. Code, when the grounds of appeal are that the arbitrator had exceeded his powers and that the defendant had withdrawn from the arbitration. The first is an objection which might have been taken to the award under s. 520, Civ. Pro. Code in the Court of first instance. The second is not valid, as the defendant had no power to withdraw from the arbitration. MANGAL SEIN v. GOBIND RAM, A.W.N. 1886, 151. (7 A. 273=A.W.N. 1885, 12, R.)

An application was made under s 525 to have the award filed and a decree passed thereon. It was opposed on the ground that the arbitrator had determined matters, which were not referred to him. On evidence, it was found that the objection to the award was well-founded within the meaning of s. 520, Civ. Pro. Code. Held, under the circumstances of the case and upon the construction of s. 526, that the Court had no power to amend the award or remit it for reconsideration, but only possessed the power to file it and pass a decree thereon or to reject the application altogether. 'misconduct' in s. 521 (a), as applied to proceedings before arbitrators, covers the violation of their duties and responsibilities as expected from them by Courts of justice. It does not necessarily imply corruption or any other moral turpitude on their part. There may be ample misconduct in the legal sense sufficient to make the Court set aside an award, even when there is no ground for imputing the slightest improper motive to the arbitrator. So, an award will be set aside where the arbitrator has improperly refused to grant the necessary adjournments to the parties, or where he has refused to hear evidence within the scope of the reference, so likewise, if he has examined a witness or a party in the absence of his opponent. In the above cases, even in the absence of any corrupt motive in the arbitrator, his acts would amount to such misconduct as to render his award bad in law, and so liable to be set aside by the Courts. On the day fixed for the delivery of the award, an application was made for extension of time which the Court granted four days later on. Two of the arbitrators agreed and the third differed. The matter was sent back for re-consideration. The two arbitrators adhered to their former opinion and the third again differed. The appellate Court passed a decree in accordance with the opinion of the majority. Held, that the extension of time was in accordance with s. 521, Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, and that the order extending the time could refer back to the date when the arbitrators applied for extension, and that, as the lower appellate Court was satisfied with the return to its order, it should be assumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the terms upon which the matter was sent back for re-consideration were carried out. S. 521 does not deal with the question of jurisdiction, but specifies the grounds upon which an award may be set aside. The Presy. S.C. Court is competent to entertain an application under s. 521, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. The High Court cannot interfere, because the Court has taken a mistaken view, as to what does or does not constitute misconduct. KALI CHARAN SIRDAR v. In the course of the suit, both parties put in a petition to the effect that they would abide by the decision of the Court as it thought just, after perusing the documents filed by them and all the records in the suit and after measuring the site and inspecting the marks, &c. The District Munsiff, after inspecting the sites and marks and after perusing the documents and other records, passed a decree in favour of plaintiff. Defendant appealed. The subordinate Judge held that the defendant was entitled to appeal. Held that the District Munsiff acted as an arbitrator by consent of parties and consequently no appeal lay from his decision, which must be looked upon as an award. As the award had not been impeached on any of the grounds specified in s. 521, Civ. Pro. Code, the decree of the District Munsiff must be considered to have been passed in accordance with the award and upheld as such. There was consequently, under s. 522, Civ. Pro. Objection to the award was taken before the first Court on the ground that the arbitrator was interested in the matter referred to his decision. The first Court decided that he had no such interest as disqualified him from being an arbitrator. On appeal, the appellate Court decided that the arbitrator had such an interest, and setting aside the award, remanded the suit to the first Court for trial on the merits. Against this order of remand an appeal was made to the High Court. Held that an appeal lay against the order of remand. "Preliminary point" in s. 562 meant a matter prelim nary to the general determination of the suit which the parties brought before the Court for decision. The Court of first appeal being debarred by the last clause of s. 522, Civ. Pro. Code, from entertaining an appeal as regards the validity of the award, could not remand the suit for decision on the merits. KRISHNAN CHETTI v. MUTHU PALANDI VACHA MAKALI TEVAR, 22 M. 172. judgment by Judge, passed by his predecessor—Application to have award filed — Decree in terms of award, passing of—Decree in terms of award application to District Judge to pass.—One R. S. applied to the District Judge under s. 525, Civ. Pro. Code to have an award filed, which was made by an arbitrator on reference in a dispute between the appellant and B. The District Judge made the following order:—" The claim of S. R. is decreed in terms of s. 526, Civ. Pro. Code, and the costs in this case be borne by the defendant." Subsequently the widow of B. applied for execution of the decree, but an objection being taken to the effect that the terms of the award were not incorporated in the decree, the application was dismissed. On this the widow filed an application under s. 205, Civ. Pro. Code, before the Judicial Commissioner, which was dismissed. The widow of B then filed an application before the District Judge to have the case decided in terms of the award, and that the decree may be drawn up in accordance with the provisions of ss. 522 and 526, Civ. Pro. Code. It was stated on her behalf that the application was under s. 623, Civ. Pro. Code, for review of judgment. The District Judge dismissed her application on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to review the original judgment. The widow of B applied for revision of this order on the ground that the District Judge failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law. Held that the Judge could not review the judgment passed by his predecessor. Held further, that the original application to have the award filed was never fully disposed of, as effect was not given to it under the provisions of s. 522, Civ. Pro. Code, no decree having been drawn up in terms of it. Held, also, that the lower Court, should have treated the application as one to have the procedure on the original application completed, and should have passed a decree in terms of the award. It was urged that the letters appointing arbitrators, in pursuance of a previous agreement, coupled in the admissions of the said letters between the parties amounted to written contract. The application was rejected. Held, that there is no agreement in writing to be acted upon under s. 523. The letters do not constitute any agreement but only refer to a prior agreement, specified, which is inadmissible, under the section. The letters cannot serve, as any help, since an oral agreement does not fall within s. 523. Code, that the parties had not agreed to refer to arbitration any matter or had agreed to refer some only of the matters determined by the award, or that the document alleged to be an award was not an award of the arbitrators, is an objection which must be considered and determined, under s. 526, upon evidence, by the Court to which the application is made. The above objections involve questions affecting the validity of the award, and, if sustained, would show that the Court which ordered the award to be filed had no jurisdiction under ss. 525, 526 to make the order. And an appeal would lie against the decree given on the award, even though it was in accordance with and not in excess of the award, if the appeal was on the ground of the absence of any agreement to refer, or on the ground that the award was not one passed by the persons to whom the matter was referred.
